Working as chancellor suggests developing a new role for Taylor. With the need and the opportunity for continuing to enlarge and strengthen the various publics and constituencies of the university, it is not difficult to pack the time with exciting and potentially productive activities.

There have been many wonderful opportunities to counsel with students and faculty, as well as to assist the new president in his leadership role. Teaching a course during interterm and conducting Bible conferences and study seminars in the area have been a significant part of the year. Involvement in numerous civic activities and organizations continues the cultivation of the relationships between Taylor University and its community. Contacts with alumni and other friends through Taylor Club meetings rounds out the public relations function of the chancellor's office. Working with several committees and campus organizations provides contact with the spiritual life as well as the academic activities of Taylor.

I view these activities as being consistent with the objectives and needs of Taylor University as an institution of Christian higher education. I would like to conduct them in such a way that they all contribute to the growing strength of the university as we strive to glorify God and serve Christian students.
