Cleveland dies

Wilbur M. Cleveland, Editor and Taylor employee since 1956, became ill with cancer during production of this Magazine. He went to be with his Lord on Sunday, April 22, as the finishing touches were made on this final publication. We worked together daily and his presence will be greatly missed. A tribute in his honor will be given in an upcoming publication.

COVER: Acting President Daryl Yost wanted a broader representation on the Administrative Cabinet, so several new members were added. Professor Philip Loy was chosen to represent the teaching faculty, and Walter Campbell, Associate Dean of Students, was selected to represent the non-teaching faculty. Wynn Lembright, Dean of Admission, and Campus Pastor Robert Griffin became full members. Vice Presidents Richard Stanislaw, Charles Jaggers, and Norman Mathews and Special Assistant to the President, Janice Crouse, remain on the Cabinet. Dr. Gregg Lehman Resigns Presidency

Personal reasons given as basis for unexpected decision

Dr. Daryl R. Yost named Acting President

Dr. Gregg O. Lehman, President of Taylor University since 1981, has announced his resignation effective June 30, 1985.

Dr. Lehman made the surprise announcement of his decision during a February meeting of the Taylor Board of Trustees.

Dr. Lehman also requested and was granted a leave of absence from March 10 through June 30. Lehman stated the decision was difficult, but that it was in his and his family's best interest that he now step down. He resigned for personal reasons and took the leave of absence because of extenuating family circumstances.

John McDougall, Chairman of the Taylor University Board of Trustees, officially announced Dr. Lehman's resignation to the campus community during a special service Wednesday, March 6.

McDougall also announced the appointment of Dr. Daryl R. Yost as Acting President. He said that a Presidential Search Committee will be selected in the immediate future.

Dr. Yost has been Vice President for University Advancement at Taylor since July 1983.

Dr. Yost served as Superintendent of the East Allen County Schools, New Haven, for nine years (1973-82), when he resigned to become Vice President, Human Resources, for the Brotherhood Mutual Insurance Company, Fort Wayne.

From 1970-73 he served as Director of Personnel and School/Community Relations for the East Allen County Schools and previously held other administrative positions in the Fort Wayne and Northern Wells school systems.

A graduate of Manchester College, Dr. Yost also has an M.A. and an Ed.D. from Ball State University.

Mr. McDougall commented, "He has proved to be a gifted administrator who will provide the quality of leadership that Taylor needs during this interim period until a new president is selected."

Lehman's four-year term saw several major advances including the new Hermanson Music Center, the launching of a 20 million dollar "Campaign for Taylor University" which includes the undertaking of the 5.5 million dollar library construction project, an innovative program of general education requirements, a program of faculty development and the strengthening of the Administrative Cabinet.

Lehman commented, "The Taylor family has been very cooperative, loving, and supportive during my years as president." He said he plans to study, read and write as an executive-in-residence at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tennessee while he explores a number of opportunities in and outside higher education.

At the Wednesday meeting, McDougall complimented the faculty and the administrative team at Taylor University and pledged the trustees' support of their commitment and vision. He assured the assembled faculty, staff and students that Taylor will move forward toward its goals.
The Administrative Cabinet

This body provides the Acting President with a wealth of insight and ideas

Very fortunately, or providentially, Dr. Yost "inherited" an unusually strong Administrative Cabinet which governs the University on a continuing basis. Dr. Yost has added four new members to make the Cabinet even stronger. Here is a brief statement about each member.

Richard J. Stanislaw, Vice President for Academic Affairs, and Professor of Music

Scholarly and very well read, Dr. Stanislaw is creative in administering the academic program. He is a music columnist and critic for 'Eternity' magazine and does considerable other writing. He also puts his creativity to excellent use in the children's choirs and the men's chorus of the Upland Evangelical Mennonite Church.

Charles "Chip" Jaggers, Vice President for Student Development

Chip is a well-known member of the Cabinet, having served at Taylor since 1972. His sincerity, gentility and leadership skills have earned him the appreciation of the campus community. He and his colleagues have put together perhaps the finest student development program to be found among small colleges anywhere. Chip is completing his Doctor of Education degree in Education Administration at Ball State University.

Norman Mathews, Vice President for Business Affairs

Norm is the least known of the members, partly because he is the newest addition to the administration and partly because the nature of his work gives him less visibility. In a matter of months Norman has established his credibility as a solid professional who is the right person for Taylor in this position. His demeanor as a genuine Christian gentleman is also very much in evidence.

Philip Loy, Associate Professor of Political Science, Head of Political Science Department, and Division Chair of Social and Behavioral Sciences

Phil is a recent addition to the Cabinet, but not to Taylor, having served as a professor since 1965. He brings both experience and a distinctive faculty perspective to the Cabinet. He has had experience in local and national politics, having run for public office and worked on a congressional staff in Washington D.C. last fall. Evidence of his teaching reputation is the Distinguished Professor of the Year award he received in 1982.

Walter Campbell, Dean of Career Development, Associate Dean of Students, and Assistant Professor

Walt has held administrative positions in all areas of Student Development during his 16 years at Taylor. Although he represents the non-teaching faculty on the Cabinet, he has been a member of many faculty committees and teaches each semester. The recipient of the Student-Friend Award in 1984, Walt brings to the Cabinet spiritual depth, practical insight, and the student perspective.

Robert Griffin, Director of Student Ministries, Campus Pastor, and Assistant Professor

Pastor Bob recently became a full member of the Cabinet, having served as an associate member since he came to Taylor in 1981. He will continue to lead the Cabinet in monthly group Bible study and prayer time. He brings vigor to Taylor's spiritual health and strength and a strong sense of the university's Christian world mission. The addition of Pastor Bob to the Cabinet is a symbolic and literal statement of Taylor's commitment to Biblical values and spiritual vitality.

Wynn A. Lembright, Dean of Admissions and Assistant Professor

Completing his second year at Taylor, Wynn is new to the Cabinet and to Taylor. He plays an integral part in Taylor’s success because he and his staff determine the composition of the Taylor student body and the Taylor graduate. Cabinet involvement will necessarily enhance a broader institutional commitment to the admissions effort and to related marketing. Having worked as the East Coast Director of Fellowship for Christian Athletes and in secular business, he brings a creative approach to utilizing human resources. As a member of the Cabinet, he represents potential students and parents.

Janice Shaw Crouse, Special Assistant to the President and Professor of Speech Communication

Janice joined the Taylor Administrative team last fall after 15 years of college teaching experience. While teaching, she was active in college governance organizations. She also writes and presents professional papers and holds membership in professional and civic societies. Although her experience includes secular institutions, she has a sensitivity and commitment to the values, philosophy and vision of Christian higher educational institutions like Taylor. Janice’s training in the communication process brings additional perception and evaluative skills to the cabinet.

Dr. Yost welcomes open communication between the President’s office and Taylor friends everywhere. He invites questions, criticisms, and suggestions by letter or phone.
Annette Shipley and Rob Muthiah: "Taylor is right for us."

Two students tell why they made the right choice

Tamara Hinman '84

The son of the Rev. and Mrs. Lionel Muthiah, New Rockford, North Dakota, Rob has moved with his family to many churches. When he was younger, he spent six years in Indonesia, Malaysia, and Singapore while his parents were on the mission field.

On campus, Rob is a member of the Chorale, Taylor Singers, and the Student Senate. He finds these activities to be learning and friendship-building experiences.

Rob is leaning toward a major in business administration. He would like to pursue a career where he can have a ministry in a secular market.

The Muthiah name is not new to Taylor. Rob's twin sisters, Lora and Lorene graduated last year and a younger brother, Richard, plans to attend in the fall. His mother, Marion (Unkenholz) Muthiah; an aunt, Ruth (Unkenholz) Case; uncles, the Rev. Riley Case and Richard Unkenholz; cousins, Cristin (Case) Bragg, and Jay Case are all graduates. Another cousin, Jeremy Case, is a sophomore at Taylor.

Rob received the President's and Valedictorian Scholarship, which are based on merit. He also received outside scholarships. "It would be a strain without the scholarships. My future at Taylor depends on scholarships and financial aid. I am grateful to Taylor alumni and friends who have made it possible for me to come here, through their donations to the school. I want to be able to help college students when I am older as others have helped me through their gifts to the university."

I wanted to come to Taylor because it was right for me . . ." said Rob Muthiah, a freshman who was accepted at both Harvard and Yale Universities, yet chose to attend Taylor.

"Academics are stressed here, but that's not all. Numerous intramural sports and spiritually building activities help to develop a well-rounded person."

He attended several Youth Conferences, an annual weekend geared to 1,000 high school students, and was impressed with the school. Rob noted that Taylor's tuition was much below that of Ivy League schools. Taylor offered him a personal relationship with professors and an opportunity for Christian growth.

"Spiritual Renewal Week, chapel, Bible studies, professors, and friends provide direction for Christian growth. A group of 20 guys from my floor gather in the lounge after special services to discuss what God is about and His plan for us. Also, God is so obvious in the lives of my professors."

Rob Muthiah

Annette Shipley was also growing in faith, but they were not the same. "God is real, but I’ve had problems relating my faith to my life—until Taylor."

Annette learned of Taylor through a college fair at the Christian high school she attended. Alumni from her church encouraged her to visit, which she did during an annual Youth Conference.

"I've appreciated the positive influence from chapel speakers, professors, and friends. They challenge me to grow, but give me room to make my own decisions."

"My professors are keeping their responsibility to give me what I'm paying for—a good education. They ask for my opinion, provide extra help, and treat me as an adult. I can definitely see their spiritual life."

"During my senior capstone class in January, everything came together. I began to see the purpose for all the classes I had taken and the importance of a liberal arts education."

F A HALL OF FAME EXISTED FOR those gifted with special ability to challenge and inspire young people, Bob Davenport would be a charter member.

Consider these incredible facts: the founder and director of Wandering Wheels, Bob has led or has been responsible for 27 cross-country cycling/ministry expeditions (including 22 co-ed trips), involving a grand total of 1700 cyclists. In addition to cycling, each group has conducted services and has sung in churches and communities along the way, presenting their Christian witness.

Bob also has led arduous cycling expeditions across Europe through the Holy Land, England, and Canada.

Another seemingly impossible dream come true, Bob’s second creation, the Possum Bus ministry, has involved a total of approximately 10,000 participants who have taken part in one or more of several trips to the East, West, North and South over the past 10 years. Those involved in this program are mainly church groups from the teens through older adults.

The Wheels headquarters, located four blocks north of the campus, has continually expanded until it now includes a retreat center called “The Kitchen,” a dormitory, two-story office building, a “factory” for assembling bicycles, and a repair garage.

But now has come the latest and most “impossible” dream of all—a ten-month, 10,000-mile feat which involves circling the perimeter of the United States. This endeavor is hailed as the most ambitious mass cycling co-educational expedition ever attempted in the United States.

The 60 cyclists undertaking this historic feat will cover 34 states and will take part in church services in various cities.

Work Day

A significant dimension to the perimeter trip, never before undertaken, is spending one day each week in a community doing goodwill projects such as painting the home of a widow. These projects have been arranged between perimeter project coordinator, Dr. Ron Keller, and local officials of the various communities.

The Big Semi

First came the perimeter trip dream, and then came a two-year planning and preparation stage to handle the mind-boggling logistics of such a program for the first time. One of the crucial needs was to secure a semi-trailer, which Bob was able to buy from Blackburn Trailer & Equipment, Inc. Then began the long, tedious task of customizing the trailer into sleeping quarters for 50 cyclists. Bunks had to be made for each, with one window per bunk, a shelf for storage, and a reading lamp as well. The staff worked far into the night during the final weeks of preparation. Finally, the rig was completed with a beautiful, striking exterior decor, displaying the Wandering Wheels name and the logo—a cross and a cyclist.

Bob and the Wheels program are highly fortunate to have a creative and devoted staff who are able to convert Bob’s ideas into working realities and to do it with a high degree of competence.

In addition to the semi-trailer, the total entourage includes a completely customized school bus with a fully equipped kitchen, and a van loaded with spare parts. The bicycles and parts were donated by the Schwinn Company.

Following a dedication chapel on January 30 when Davenport was presented with a plaque from the University, the semi-trailer and all the other vehicles with the participants headed for St. Simons Island, Georgia, where the trip was launched.

Feathersound Church

One early highlight of the trip was a fellowship meeting at Feathersound Community Church, Clearwater, Florida. Hosting the festive events were the Rev. Earl and Dottie Hartman and Don and Bonnie Odle. During the program, Bob Davenport presented the newest Wheels’ film, a documentary on the 1984 cross-country dirt bike adventure.

Dr. Ted Engstrom, a Taylor graduate and President of World Vision International, was guest speaker for the Sunday morning service at the Feathersound Church.

The cyclists continue on their journey, knowing that November 24, 1985, at St. Simons Island, the date and place of the trip’s completion, are far, far away.

The perimeter trip schedule through June 15 is as follows:

The Psychologists

This team of young, creative, and devout psychologists/teachers, guides Taylor students into a deeper understanding of God's creation and toward a Christian world view.
The Human Body: More Tabernacle Than Barn

The author points out God's work in giving man unique design superior to other animals

Mark Cosgrove, Ph.D.  Head, Department of Psychology

Condensed from his latest book submitted for publication

Psychology at Taylor differs from other undergraduate departments, even at other Christian colleges, in that the discipline is taught in the context of the Christian world view. The psychology department faculty firmly believes that the Bible provides the guiding framework for a psychological study of human nature.

The department also believes that the field of psychology is part of God's general revelation and that it can contribute to the overall understanding of human nature. Because of this general view of the relationship between psychology and Christianity, most of the psychology courses offer a thorough integration of psychological and theological material. This integrative material may be in the form of philosophical reasoning from the standpoint of the Christian world view, teaching pertinent biblical content, apologetic treatment of psychological data and theories, or a more compassionate pursuit of the application of the data and theories to personal and social problems.

The psychology department is also planning ways to be involved in the personal and spiritual growth of its students by providing discipleship opportunities, new personal growth courses, and increased opportunities for the application of psychology in Christian ministry.

The following pages feature an article by one member of the Psychology Department, plus a brief, personal introduction of each professor.

Man is the only animal who cannot drink and breathe at the same time. He is the only animal who can bleed to death through his nose, who sweats all over his body to keep cool and whose females have breasts. Man is also the only animal who blushes or needs to.

These interesting facts and many more point out that the human body is an enigma in the animal world. Its fifty-trillion cells are quite ordinary, but when fully assembled, they form a frame which seems more tabernacle than barn. Only the human body uniquely stands and moves fully erect, freeing delt hands to do mind's bidding.

Alone among the primates the human body is naked, not protected against storm or thorn, but designed for contact with other humans. Only the human body, of all animal bodies, is uniquely suited to mate face to face, person to person. The human brain alone has a center for understanding and producing speech. The human body goes through a longer childhood and a longer life than any other animal.

These and many more unique characteristics of the human body should make us pause and carefully consider God's creative design of the human being and the contributions our body makes to our personhood.

Charles Darwin was convinced that man's body bore the indelible stamp of a lowly origin. I think that the opposite is more the case. Our bodies testify to our humanness, personhood, value, design, and meaning. The reason that we of all animals cannot drink and breathe at the same time is that our throats were designed for speaking. There is no denying that we are a part of nature, but we are also uniquely above it. In the biblical view of person we are separate from our bodies and yet we are our bodies.

In ordinary usage the words "human nature" refer to those psychological and spiritual aspects of ourselves that segregate us from the animal world. However, we do not usually think of our bodies as specifically "human." In the biblical, holistic view of the person, considering the body as human makes sense. In holistic thinking there is a close relationship, though not an identity, between who we are and what the body is. The body is our outer self and the medium over which we can express our inner thoughts and feelings. The body is a partner in the expression of our personhood.

Obvious differences

In studying the enormous differences between human and animal bodies, we should recognize that similarities between humans and animals are also to be expected. The similarities, though, should not be used to hide the obvious differences present. If we have overlooked the uniqueness of the human body, as I believe we have, it has been because of an over-enthusiastic support of the theory of evolution and the consequent need to see humans as the descendents of apes.

Consciously or unconsciously our scientific culture has made selections, recordings, and interpretations of scientific data based upon what is relevant to the theory of evolution.
"The human body has a marvelously designed face to more immediately and more intimately reveal personhood."

This subjectivity has caused scientists to miss or ignore the amazing uniqueness of the human body.

The face

One area of uniqueness in the human body is the face. The human body has a marvelously designed face to more immediately and more intimately reveal personhood. The face is so important to our personal communication that it troubles us to have a serious conversation on the telephone, and not be able to see the other person's facial reactions. It disturbs us when someone refuses to look at us as we debate our side of an argument.

Of all the creatures in the world, the human being is endowed with the most complex face to present to the world. Our facial muscles provide us with the most intricate system of facial expression. In addition, the unique features of the human face join with the facial muscles to produce highly individualized faces.

Wonders of the face

The human face, unlike any other animal face is composed almost entirely of subcutaneous muscles which move skin rather than bone. These delicate muscles form the facial frame on which the volumes of human expression are written. Paper-thin muscles are arranged at the chin and forehead, and are grouped around the orifices of the face, the eyes, nose and mouth. These muscles make it possible for us to squint, smile, frown, purse our lips, wrinkle our noses, widen our eyes, and thus communicate on our fleshy, ever-changing mobile, our surprise, pleasure, disgust, love, fear, and more. In all there are some twenty-eight human facial muscles involved in developing facial expressions.

Among the primates, the apes have exceptional facial control around the mouth and nose, but generally poor control elsewhere. Nevertheless, by controlling their large lips, the apes can produce a wide variety of facial expressions, most of them comical. These expressions play an important role in ape communication, but only of a limited number of signals when compared to the complex human face.

There are over 4,200 species of mammals in our world and only a few are not covered with fur. We are one of those few, and the reason for our nakedness still eludes biologists. Mammals that are hairless, or nearly so, include the elephant, hippopotomous, rhinoceros, dolphin, whale, bat, pig, and some burrowing animals. In each of these cases of hairlessness there is a good reason to be found.

Larger animals, such as the elephant, hippopotomous, and rhinoceros, possess few body hairs in order to prevent overheating. The whale and the dolphin are streamlined for swimming. The bat has naked wings to reduce its weight for flying. Pigs and a few burrowing animals are hairless because continually moving around in the dirt presents a problem with cleanliness.

Human skin

But why are we naked? We are not a large mammal, nor do we travel exclusively in the water, air, or dirt. The answer is to be found in God's design of the human body with our personhood in view. A careful study of the human body and its skin shows that the human skin is far more sensitive than the skin of all other mammals. This greatly expands the range of human experience, particularly sexual experience. In addition, contact with the skin of the developing infant is critical to the life and emotional development of the child. Finally, the naked human skin is important to our rich experience of emotional feeling, which richness animals must surely lack.

The most surprising differences between human and animal bodies becomes obvious when studying sexual activity. The body human tells us very clearly about the importance of our relating as persons in the act of sex. A close look at the human body suggests a personal dimension to human sexual relations. The human sexual response is designed by God for pleasure and communion of persons.

The body human is designed to allow us to make love face to face, person to person, with prolonged, whole-body contact. Our bodies are freed from the enslaving cycles of heat and ovulation to follow the commands of personhood, love, fun, and spirit. The human female is a joint partner in the sex act by the very nature of her body's unique design. She is not just nature's womb in which to plant the seed, but she is an equal partner in the motives, the pleasures, and the communication that is sexual.

Other unique erogenous zones on the human body are appropriately on the face. These are the ultra-sensitive, permanently out-turned lips and the human nose which is filled with erectile tissue. The nose as an erogenous zone is highly vascularized for this reason and nose bleeds can be serious. Perhaps the most famous individual to die of a bloody nose was Attila the Hun. In 453 AD he returned to his Hungarian capital to add to his harem a young girl named Ildico. After a night of heavy drinking he was found dead in bed beside his young bride. He had burst a blood vessel in his nose and choked to death on blood collected in his throat.

With our expertly designed bodies our personhood finds its full expression and reign. Personhood does not simply emerge from the propitious union of arched feet, opposable thumbs, curved spines, naked skin, facial muscles, and speech centers. Personhood is developed and expressed to its fullest in such bodies. Animals, who are not persons, have no need for the unique features of the human body. When we study the human body, we should realize that there is more in view than just muscle and bone. There is something important here. Our bodies tell of a special design, of our unique personhood, and of a glory that is not our own.
They make learning personal

The five full-time members of the psychology department find the environment of Taylor University conducive to personal and professional growth. Though young in age they bring experienced backgrounds in academic research and teaching, counseling, consulting, and Christian witness to their ministry with students at Taylor. Dr. Dave Aycock, University Psychologist, also teaches some courses for the department.

Joe Lund
Associate Professor of Psychology

Dr. Lund, a Grace College graduate, has been in the psychology department since 1973. He came directly from Ball State University where he completed his M.A. degree in social psychology. His service to the university was interrupted by a two-year leave of absence (1978-80) to work on his PhD at Indiana University in educational psychology, which was awarded in 1981.

Joe is married to Dianne (TU, 1984) who teaches first grade in the Upland schools. They have two daughters, Lindsey 7, and Ashley 6, who help Joe keep in touch with the realities of developmental psychology.

Dr. Lund is responsible for courses in life span development as well as personality theories, social, and industrial psychology. In addition, for the past two years he has been the head coach of Taylor's intercollegiate soccer team.

Vance Maloney
Assistant Professor of Psychology and Director of Testing

Vance joined the psychology department in 1981 and is currently teaching courses in counseling, introduction to psychology, psychological testing, and interpersonal relations. Vance is a graduate of Cedarville College and Ball State University. He is currently nearing completion of his Ph.D. in counseling psychology and has worked in private practice with Christian Counseling Outreach in Kokomo, IN.

Vance's concern is to make Christianity practical in daily living and he has attempted to structure his courses in this fashion. He has developed an instrument to measure the "Fruit of the Spirit" in a person's life. He is also researching the idea of the local church as a therapeutic community.

An aspect of being at Taylor which the Maloneys find exciting is the availability of missionary work. They are excited about being the faculty leaders for the Lighthouse trip to the Bahamas in January 1986. Vance and his wife, Tammi, have two children, Brendan, 3½ and Erin, 1.

Steve Snyder
Assistant Professor of Psychology

Steve believes that his main objective as an educator is to motivate students to apply in their lives biblical, psychological teaching. He seeks to do this by modeling a life consistent with these principles, as well as by teaching them with rigor. His current teaching interests lie in the areas of learning and cognitive psychology and ethics in using psychology. His research interests include the correlation between imagery and self concept, and the relationship of the doctrines of salvation to mental health.

Steve graduated from Cedarville College, before going to Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, where he obtained the M.A. degree in Counseling Psychology in 1982. He has been teaching and counseling at Taylor since 1982, while, at the same time, taking further graduate work at Ball State. Steve's educational goal is to receive his Doctorate as a Counselor/Educator before the age of 32.

His wife, Debbie, was formerly executive secretary for the vice-president of advancement at Taylor. Steve and Debbie will become parents for the first time in June. They desire as a couple to exemplify to Taylor students what true spirituality is through their hospitality, marriage relationship, and Christian caring.

Taylor University Magazine, Spring 1985
Allen Meyer
Associate Professor of Psychology

Dr. Meyer came to Taylor University from the Ph.D. program at Indiana University having had a background in junior high and college teaching, and in a traveling youth ministry. A graduate of a Christian University in the south, Dr. Meyer has had training in history, speech, and church history. His introduction to psychology was via the hybrid field of educational psychology, a field in which he holds the M.A. and the Ph.D. degree. Allen and his wife Diane have a history of involvement in Christian ministry. Diane, who is the Associate Director of Student Ministries at Taylor, spent six years in leadership on the staff of Campus Crusade for Christ. Teaching and working at Taylor have simply been an extension of that ministry for both.

Allen’s interests lie primarily in practical integration of psychology and theology and the field of marriage and family relationships. The goal of Christian education, he says, is to encourage a God-centered viewpoint in all areas of life, especially in the various disciplines of academic life.

David Aycock
University Psychologist, Counseling Center Director, and Associate Professor

Dr. Aycock, who joined the Taylor faculty in 1983, heads the counseling services for the Taylor students and is an adjunct professor in the Psychology Department. David’s major research and interest area is in the study of stress management. He is a frequent speaker on this subject both on and off campus.

David is a 1977 graduate of Tennessee Temple University. He studied at the Psychological Studies Institute in Atlanta and received his M.Ed. and Ph.D. in Counseling Psychology from Georgia State University. He is a licensed Psychologist in Indiana.

Taylor’s “whole-person” educational program was a major reason Dr. Aycock came to Upland. He is excited about Taylor’s commitment to the development of the student as a total person. The students’ emotional health is his domain of ministry.

David would like to see the Counseling Center become a resource to all students, not just to those in distress. It can also serve as a training center for social and personal skills building and growth experiences. He has been working to reduce the stigma sometimes attached to psychological services and to raise the visibility of the Counseling Center.

David and his wife LeNan have two daughters, Kristen, 5, and Anna, 1.

Mark Cosgrove
Psychology Department Head and Associate Professor

Mark received the B.A. from Creighton University and the Ph.D. in experimental psychology from Purdue University. Prior to coming to Taylor he was a lecturer and research associate with Probe Ministries, International of Dallas, specializing in Christian apologetics. In that position he lectured at dozens of the leading state universities in the United States and Canada.

Since coming to Taylor Mark has specialized in teaching the Integration of Psychology and Christianity and Biblical Psychology classes, and, most recently, the Freshman Seminar in the new general education program. He was honored by being named Professor of the Year in 1980. Mark’s publications include five books on the integration of psychology and Christianity, including his most recent The Body Human (submitted to Zondervan Publishing House).

Mark’s major reason for teaching at Taylor is to assist students in developing the Christian world view as a foundation for their academic thought and personal living. He and his wife, Jo Ann, have three energetic sons: Walker 7, Robert 6, and Preston 3. Mark and Jo Ann feel that their most rewarding experiences at Taylor have come from the very special friendships they have built with students and staff.
Several years ago I dedicated these words to the work of Will Cleveland: "I hear the scratching of the pen, I see the midnight candle burning low in its socket. And bending low over his table I see the care-worn editor, straining every nerve, and distorting every faculty of his mind to crowd his column with productions that shall make us all stare with wonder and amazement."

(Lyman Stedman)

Those of us who worked with Will know that this typically quiet, rather reserved man was a dedicated servant of God and of Taylor University, who uncomplainingly put as many hours into his work as it demanded. His own tender conscience acted as a conscience and stabilizing force for the University. He brought continuity through his Taylor University Magazine and made it not just a highly respected alumni publication, but a personal extension of himself and his values as well.

Will never performed in the limelight (except, of course, with an occasional reading of what he called his "silly" poems). He preferred to do his work quietly, simply carrying out his duties, and staying at the sidelines when accolades were given.

We will miss this man—simply miss his presence in our lives. We will feel it when we walk past his empty office or when we notice one person missing at church gatherings. But most of all we will notice the emptiness in ourselves.

Leaving this life has not caused Will pain; he did not die with regrets that he never carried out some life-long dream or accomplished this or that project. But his leaving causes us the pain in realizing that Will embodied a piece of our love and affection and respect, a piece of us.

Will was not bigger than life, and it is easy to say complimentary tributes after a person is gone, but the best tribute to Will is to repeat what others said of him while he was here. Will Cleveland simply was not a man of whom people questioned integrity or motives. He lived what he was naturally—a gentle, witty, bumble, and caring man—according to what he believed in—integrity and principle and service before God.

We will miss this flesh-and-blood illustration of the word "gentleness"... and none who knew him at all needs to have that explained. Very simply, I and so many others will miss Will, but we are thankful for the gift of having worked and lived and worshipped with him for so many years.

"This life, therefore, is not righteousness but growth in righteousness, not health but healing, not being but becoming, not rest but exercise; we are not yet what we shall be, but we are growing toward it; the process is not yet finished, but it is going on; this is not the end, but it is the road; all does not yet gleam with glory, but all is being purified."

One of the Best

The Psychology Department has developed into one of the leading undergraduate programs among Christian colleges.

In the last ten years the psychology department at Taylor University has developed into one of the leading undergraduate programs among Christian colleges. This department is in many ways similar to most undergraduate psychology programs in terms of the spread of courses offered and the preparation given for careers and graduate studies.

Three degree tracks may be pursued through the psychology department. Most of the 105 psychology majors pursue the B.A. degree and plan to attend graduate school or pursue employment in psychology-related fields. Ten percent of the psychology majors pursue a double major to broaden their expertise and marketability.

A B.S. degree may be taken with a major in psychology/systems. This program combines the practical emphasis of computer and business training with the subject matter of psychology. Students may also take the B.S. degree with a major in Education. In these cases the teaching area is in the social sciences with psychology selected as the second teaching area.

Human Research

Although the psychology department strives for excellence in teaching, facilities are available to enhance and apply the student's learning. The department emphasizes human research methodologies and variables rather than classical methods and issues in psychology. Students may do field studies of children or pursue practicums in mental health facilities. In addition, students are introduced to the use of computers in research and have access to mainline computer facilities at Taylor.

Graduates of the psychology department have shown themselves well qualified to pursue a variety of opportunities. Approximately 30% attend graduate school or seminary immediately following graduation, while another 30% enter within two or three years. Recent graduates have attended major seminaries and state university graduate schools as well as Christian graduate programs in psychology.

Taylor psychology graduates most often pursue advanced degrees in counseling, but many have achieved further degrees in various areas of Christian ministry and even medicine and law. With the B.A. degree some of the psychology graduates have been accepted into entry-level positions in YWCA/YMCA facilities, juvenile delinquency centers, mental health agencies, drug abuse centers, and Christian youth ministries. Often, these pre- or paraprofessional positions lead to higher-level opportunities.

Continuing Education

The psychology department provides assistance to other University programs in several ways. It services many education, social work, and pre-nursing majors with courses in Introduction to Psychology, Child Psychology, Adolescent Psychology, and Personality Theories. The psychology department also offers courses in the continuing education program of the university. Interpersonal Relations and Stress Management are two recent offerings in this program. The psychology department is also planning to offer, in cooperation with the Christian Education department, some graduate-level courses in pastoral counseling.

The testing department of the university is also administered by the psychology department under the leadership of professor Vance Maloney. As the director of the testing department he supervises cafeteria evaluation of faculty teaching, CLEP (College Level Examination Program) testing, freshman testing, and psychological testing for the counseling center. The testing department also acts as the center for institutional research.
Campus holds memorial service in memory of David Jones

A Memorial Service was held on April 17 in honor of David N. Jones who died in a one-car accident near campus on April 12. David was a sophomore elementary education major and member of the Trojan football team. During the special service David's sister Lisa, a 1984 Taylor graduate, members of the football team, and special friends from his dorm shared memories of David.

"...David respected his friends, played hard at his sports, deeply appreciated his parents, cherished his car, treated children with a special care, and loved his girlfriend deeply. But most of all Dave loved his Lord and Savior..." commented his roommate Tim Heebner.

"Dave was many things to all of us. He was the hug we needed when times were rough; he was the 'I love you' when we were unsure of ourselves. Dave gave all of us some memories and a part of himself that only each one of us can understand. In his death it's these memories that we will hold on to..." stated the men from First West Wengatz.

David N. Jones

has the opportunity to lead 14 other students. "The job is important because positive visits often bring students to Taylor." Annette has also been a cheerleader, new student orientation leader, and math club officer.

"I am receiving a well-rounded education, not just intellectually, but socially and spiritually as well. I feel ready to face the world outside of Taylor."

"Another plus for Annette's education at Taylor is that she met her future husband here. In May she will become Mrs. Bragg when she marries Dan Bragg, a senior social studies education major."

Annette has received the Ruegsegger Scholarship, math scholarships provided by alumni, and financial aid. "Taylor professors work through alumni to provide scholarships that help me to stay at Taylor. Alumni are appreciated and very important. They are investing in my future, and I will try to make it a worthwhile investment."

On and Off Campus

Growth in spiritual interest seen

An expanding interest in spiritual growth is evident on campus by the increasing number of students attending chapel and special services, because of students' participation in Taylor World Outreach, and raising funds for outreach experiences. Pastor Robert Griffin, director of student ministries, is enthusiastic about the increase in spiritual focus since he came to Taylor almost four years ago.

"The attendance for Spiritual Renewal Week with Gordon MacDonald was exceptional. It equaled the fall week with Jill Briscoe, which was the best attended ever. Many students came forward to pray with friends about private concerns and needs after the services each evening," commented the Rev. Griffin.

While at Taylor, the Rev. MacDonald shared many of the needs he had recently seen in Africa. The Taylor community responded by donating $5,557 ($557 over their goal), to World Vision for the famine in Africa.

The Taylor community also participated in activities related to Black History Month in February. Informative, inspirational, and entertaining chapels, concerts, and seminars were well attended and received positive response from the students.

Students raised $133,000 for outreach projects last year, with the amount expected to exceed $150,000 this year. The number of participants in TWO has grown to over 900. Anticipation for the upcoming Youth Conference is growing as 400 students are involved in that ministry with high school students.
On and Off Campus

Zondervans,
Gaithers
present hymnals

Mr. and Mrs. Pat Zondervan and Bill and Gloria Gaither have presented to Taylor University a gift of 800 hymnals for the Rediger Chapel/Auditorium. The hymnals, "Hymns For The Family of God," were published by Paragon.

Mutual Security awards funds

Mutual Security Life Insurance Company of Fort Wayne has awarded Taylor University a grant of $18,000 to endow a financial aid scholarship for students majoring in business, accounting, or economics. Announcement of the grant was made by Dr. Lester C. Gerig, President of MSL and a member of the Taylor Board of Trustees.

Businesses, matching funds support Taylor

A total of 35 businesses and foundations gave Taylor University a total of $34,769 between January 1-February 21, 1985. Twenty-three of these companies contributed employee matching grant funds in the amount of $11,512.

During 1984 a total of 36 businesses gave $501,080, with 96 companies matching gifts totaling $76,315. In 1983 the matching gift total was $10,000, compared with $49,331 in 1982. This steady increase in the amount of matching gift funds is an encouragement to the University.

New library, Campaign progressing

The $5.5 million library, the most exciting visible advance now taking place on the campus, is beginning to show both its size and general design.

Most of the structural steel is in place and the final roof lines can be seen. The exterior block wall is up along the southwest side of the lower level and is under way for the north wall of the main level. The block walls for the 24-hour study room are up and the archives area has walls, rafters and a roof. The building is approximately one year from completion.

The library is an integral part of the Campaign for Taylor University which was launched November 3, 1984. The other goals of the campaign are funds for student and faculty endowment, renovation of the Ayres Alumni Memorial Library, and the Annual Fund.

Gannet Foundation gives $10,000 grant

The Gannet Foundation has presented a grant of $10,000 to the Communication Arts Department for the purchase of a journalism laboratory to support a growing Mass Communication major.

According to Dr. Dale Jackson, Head of the Department, the grant came as a result of a proposal written by Professors Marilyn Walker and Tim Kirkpatrick and will be used to purchase computerized newswriting equipment similar to that used by newspapers, magazines and television stations. Marion Chronicle Tribune officials Richard Thomas, Publisher, Allen Miller, Executive Editor, and Chuck Wanninger, Editor, provided support for the grant proposal and are giving technical assistance in the purchase of equipment.

Dr. Daryl Yost
Acting President, March 10, 1985

This Acting President will take ACTION!

The title "acting" often carries with it the thought of someone with his proverbial finger in the institutional dike or filling in and holding things together on a temporary basis. Or, at worst, a "lame duck" figurehead who tries to do whatever he can until a permanent leader is selected.

If there have ever been any such eras in Taylor's past, Dr. Daryl Yost's term will not be among them—you can be assured of that!

There was absolutely no doubt in the minds of the Board of Trustees (and those on the campus who have worked closely with him) that Daryl is the one clear choice to serve as acting president. Several (of many) observations support this conviction:

• Daryl "works smart." He is Christ-motivated and self-energizing and pours himself into his work. He loves Taylor and he loves serving at Taylor. He definitely is not the high strung Type "A" person. Rather, he reflects the demeanor of a well-ordered life with stability born of established priorities and strong faith. He also practices the art of listening carefully, and speaking softly, deliberately and firmly.

• Both Daryl and Joenita Yost are devout believers. They are long time members of the Missionary Church Association and maintain their membership at Grabill, Indiana. Daryl regularly challenges his staff to remember special concerns in prayer and is himself a man of prayer.

• Despite his soft spoken demeanor, Daryl is very sociable, genuinely interested in people and their personal concerns, and makes friends and acquaintances very easily. Part of his conversation with staff members usually includes questions about the welfare of various Taylor alumni and friends.

• He is both humble and confident. He does not measure the exercise of personal influence in terms of the number of changes he can make. Daryl is a forthright decision maker, but only after weighing the available data from the appropriate sources. He solicits and welcomes advice and opinions of members of his staff in the decision making process.

• Daryl is goals directed. But his experience and common sense keep the goals realistic. Expectations of employees are mature, challenging, and reasonable.

• He has the facility to grasp the basic issues and the "big picture" of a problem so as to deal with it in terms of the best interests of the University.

If I were to characterize Daryl in a few simple words they would be, genuine, honest, caring, sincere, gifted in administration, and zealous for Taylor and the work of the Lord. Without doubt, this Acting President will wield a strong, beneficial influence for Taylor.
