Culmination of the capital campaign  ▪ Dedication of Rupp Communication Arts Center  ▪ Alumni Award Honorees

It was a fairly formal affair—lots of pomp and circumstance—but then, ground-breaking at Taylor generally are. The facility now officially under construction would be named in honor of the eminent research physiologist Dr. Walter Randall '38 and his wife Gwen (Neibel '40). The couple stepped to the podium to make a few remarks. Not one to stand on ceremony, their four-year-old grandson, Benjamin, joined them.

In looking for photographs to include in this issue, I ran across one of this scene. Even today, it brings a smile to my lips—and a sigh, for the Randall Environmental Studies Center now honors the memory of Ben’s maternal grandparents.

Mortality has been much on my mind of late. A few months ago, our family received a series of middle-of-the-night phone calls informing us my mother was being rushed to the hospital, then to a larger one, then to a larger one yet. She had suffered (we found out later) both a brain aneurysm and a heart attack. It was her 62nd birthday. She was not expected to live through the night. (She did, however, and further surprised her doctors by being well enough to return home two weeks later.)

I was able to be there during her time in the hospital’s intensive care unit. For those 10 days, my world seemed to stand still. Everything seemed different. My priorities had suddenly changed. The brevity of life, and my own mortality landed like a one-two punch. If I were to die on my 62nd birthday, or my 42nd, or my next, what would I leave behind?

In the answer to this question lies one of the reasons for my involvement and investment in Taylor University—the school of Sammy Morris and Dr. Thaddeous Reade, of my college roommate, of my Greek professor, and of all Taylor students and faculty, future and present and past.

The opportunity to be a part of so grand a parade of scholars and servants and homemakers and world-changers is to me high privilege. It is to identify my life with a larger movement of God, with an institution he has seen fit to use in his service.

This is, I think, not a bad heritage to leave for my grandchildren’s grandchildren.

In some ways, this issue of Taylor is about heritage. In it, we celebrate the culmination of a capital campaign that resulted in the opening of the Randall Environmental Studies Center and the Rupp Communication Arts Center. These facilities will enhance the learning environment of generations of Taylor students yet to come. We thank each and every one who had a hand in making this happen.

And even as we do, we can feel the hand of the future generations tugging at our skirt or pants leg, a gentle reminder of the responsibility each one of us holds for leaving the world a better place for our having passed through it.

Cyberspace is for the taking

I opened the latest edition of Taylor magazine with great anticipation. Using computers in ministry has long been a yearning of mine which few people seem to understand... yet.

However, after reading the articles I am a bit concerned. They were well-written articles which addressed significant aspects of this latest application of technology, but I came away feeling, in an effort to counter the brassy claims of the evangelists and capitalists of the Information Age and to induce some rational restraint, the positive possibilities were not given enough attention.

I envision, and have actually seen, some extraordinary examples of using technology as a tool for use in building the Kingdom of God.

Communication

My Dad and I have begun corresponding via e-mail through CompuServe. We were never all that close until we went to PromiseKeeper's together this past summer. We've shared thoughts via e-mail that have been difficult in person. Corresponding with Dad, E-mail gives almost the same immediate feedback as person-to-person communication, but allows more time for reflection if desired. We are communicating like never before.

Salvation

Soon after I got an account on America Online, I discovered a Christian Fellowship chat room. All kinds of folks pop into these rooms. Often the majority are not Christians or are marginal at best. I have a heard of a number of accounts where lives have been changed through online encounters (healings, salvation!).

I was privileged to minister along with a pastor from Atlanta to a very distressed man who was enslaved to lifelong bisexual bondages. He was destroying himself by leading a dual life. On one side he was a family man, deacon of a Baptist church. On the other, he engaged in a sordid lifestyle of one-night stands, wild parties and the like. He had been keeping this sordid side a secret, but it was unraveling at the seams. He was near-suicidal.

To make a long story short, we were able to counsel and pray with him in a private chat room where he found an initial release. He experienced further deliverance at a church that he and his wife had just 'stumbled' into.

I could sense God's overwhelming presence as we prayed for him 'online' that night. I give our Lord Jesus all praise and glory. Only He can change lives and deliver us from our sin.

Cooperative forum

I encourage you to check out what the Christian Interactive Network (CIN) is endeavoring to accomplish. Currently a forum on CompuServe, CIN started in the spring of last year. It is dedicated to using cyberspace to reach the lost and provide ministry avenues for the church. It has separate forums for missions, world crisis intervention, homeschooling, ministry and Christian publishing.

A number of Christian organizations are already supporting bulletin boards through CIN. CIN also has a strong desire to educate the body of Christ about the perils and potentials of cyberspace.

Educational opportunities

Distance education was also mentioned in at least one of the Taylor articles. I think that I may well qualify as a 'lay expert' on this subject. After leaving Taylor due to lack of funds, my wife Rae-Ann (Fittou x '83) and I decided to get married. We moved back to Harrisburg, Penn., where she continued her studies at Messiah College and finished with a degree in behavioral science while working part time.

Because of job requirements, I could only take courses at night. Finally, I completed a bachelor's degree in 1993 at an accredited school which specializes in distance education.

I hope Taylor will consider distance learning programs. Few other Christian schools really do. Taylor could do a great job at it. I can't say exactly why, but when I think of Taylor, I always think of a school that leads the way into all that God wants her students to be. That's why I initially chose Taylor, and why I would have really preferred to finish up there... and why I am writing to encourage the Taylor community to take hold of the opportunities of cyberspace with a Joshua/Caleb attitude. We are not grasshoppers (as the other spiers thought); our God is able. He will give us the land!

2 TAYLOR / Winter 1995
Friend to students

For 22 years, Billie Manor, director of the learning support center (LSC), has helped students achieve their academic potential. She has works closely with disabled students and others with learning disabilities. Noting her many contributions, the Parents’ Association honored her this year with the Student Friend Award. Manor says it is rewarding to see students apply an understanding of their learning styles in the classroom.

Survey says...

A recent survey conducted by the Taylor Student Organization (TSO) reveals that students generally prefer single-sex residence halls. Almost twice as many students said they would be more likely to stay on campus in a single-sex dorm than in a co-ed environment. Students also say that single-sex dorms contribute more to personal growth than co-ed halls. Taylor currently has three co-ed residence halls with separate floors for men and women.

Honored for excellence

James Coe, associate professor of business, was honored with the 1994 Teaching Excellence and Campus Leadership Award during the Faculty Chapel in September. Coe was cited as a pioneer in teaching methodology and creative course development, as well as a model teacher and campus leader. The recipient of the award is selected by a campus committee, and receives a check for $1000.

Morris Hall part II

According to plans submitted this fall for approval to the Taylor Board of Trustees, a replacement for the aging Sammy Morris Hall will be built to the south of the existing facility, facing east toward State Road 22.

The plans state that the old Morris Hall is to be demolished upon completion of the new dormitory. The board called upon the Taylor administration to identify at least $4 million to complement a bond issue for the remaining $3.267 million needed both to finance the new building and raze the existing one.

Moving on

Feeling called to church ministry in Oregon, Dale and Bonnie Sloat said goodbye to the Taylor community last summer. But not without tears. For 12 years, the Sloats served Taylor—Dale as an instructor and as the director of university relations, and Bonnie as an adjunct faculty member. The Sloats were actively involved with missionary kids (MKs), and nine years ago founded at Taylor Mu Kappa, an organization for MKs, which now has chapters on 42 campuses.

Maintenance gets a raise

A 15,865 square-foot replacement facility for the two buildings destroyed in a fire in November 1993, should be ready for occupancy in March, according to Provost Daryl Yost. The buildings, grounds, and housekeeping staffs currently operate from temporary quarters in the basement of Bergwall Hall. Named for long-time Buildings and Grounds director Ralph Boyd, the $500,000 complex will provide offices, workshop areas, and storage.

The show must go on

As the production date of the fall play, Big River, came closer and closer and several components of the theater remained yet to be completed, those involved with the production began to wonder if the show would indeed go on as planned.

Perhaps it was by divine Providence that Taylor was able to borrow part of the set for the play, says Dr. Oliver Hubbard, professor of communication arts and director of the play. After attending a production of Big River at southern Indiana’s Lincoln State Park, Hubbard spoke with the director, who offered Taylor the use of part of their set.

Regardless of additional complications with lights and sound equipment, the show did go on, a testimony to God’s faithfulness, Hubbard says. In fact, the theme for the cast became, “He is faithful.”

Opening night was exhausting, but by the second night, Hubbard and the cast were more comfortable with the new theater environment. Next up: Taylor theatre’s production of Neil Simon’s Lost in Yonkers, hits the stage this month.

Experiments on the lone prairie

Three students presented papers at the annual meeting of the Indiana Academy of Science, November 4, based on the first year results of a study of prairie plants. Eric Adams ’95, Ann Lawson ’95, and Mark Rudy ’96 worked with professors on a project examining land replenishment through the use of native prairie plants.

The Upland Prairie restoration plot served as the field site for the the project, which included a study of the effects of various fertilizers on prairie plants. Last year’s heavy prompt a second project noting the effects of flooding on the prairie. A third experiment focused on controlling various non-native weeds in the prairie restoration plot.

Technical revolutions

The Educational Technology Center (ETC) added cutting-edge technology to its collection of services this past fall. CD-ROM drives were added to both PC and Macintosh computers, as well as complex multimedia production capabilities.

Also new this school year are a color printer, color copier, and software which allows 35-millimeter slide images to be stored on CD-ROM. “We are catching the front end of a great multimedia wave at Taylor,” says Jim Kleist, director of the ETC.
University's reputation for academic excellence noted

Two national publications rank Taylor among the best for scholastic leadership.

Put to the test, it seems Taylor has what national evaluators are looking for in an educational institution. This past fall, Taylor University was recognized for the pursuit of academic excellence by listings in both Peterson's Guide to Competitive Colleges and in U.S. News and World Report's "America's Best Colleges."

Peterson's Guide lists those colleges and universities consistently attracting the most accomplished students. Institutions are selected for inclusion based on the scholastic achievements of their respective student bodies, as well as data on class size, majors, and endowments. This marks the second consecutive year that the University has been named in the annual survey.

U.S. News and World Report listed Taylor for the eighth time in its annual college poll. Various factors are considered in determining whether a school will be listed among "America's Best Colleges," including tuition, enrollment, endowment, academic programs and performance, and student life.

According to Provost Daryl Yost, the recognition comes as the result of the standard of excellence that Taylor works toward achieving.

First Scholarship Award Dinner pays tribute to donors

Scholarship donors and recipients are afforded an opportunity to meet one another

By her own reckoning, when LaRita Boren, Taylor trustee and long-time friend of the college, attended Oklahoma State University in the mid-1950s, she received 32 hours of course credit for a total of $224 a year. "That's a little different from what things are now," she said, highlighting the need for scholarships. She was "preaching to the choir," addressing those gathered for the Upland campus' inaugural Scholarship Award Dinner, held last fall.

The event brought scholarship donors and recipients together for an evening, and allowed President Jay Kesler and others to extend a personal thank you to donors who assist students by making scholarship gifts. In his remarks, Kesler noted that, as Taylor's admissions process is not based on a prospective student's ability to pay, tuition scholarships are an important source of funds to many students.

Christian Hibschman '95, counts herself among that number. A Christian education major from Warren, N.J., she says, "Personally, I wouldn't be here if it was not for the financial aid that I received."

Provost Daryl Yost (left) greets Howard Garver, Garver and his wife, V. Anne (Renbarger '75), have established a scholarship fund which benefits music students.
Hybels, Campolo issue difficult call to always act in love

Two prominent evangelical leaders give the campus community “much to think about”

Members of the Taylor community were challenged recently by two evangelical leaders to live out the love of Christ in addressing a world in need.

Rev. Bill Hybels, senior pastor of the Willow Creek Community Church in South Barrington, Ill., and Dr. Tony Campolo, professor of sociology at Eastern College, each delivered several messages to the campus during the fall semester.

In a series titled “Our Modern Moral Trifecta,” Hybels placed his ‘bet’ as to the top three moral dilemmas facing the Christian community and addressed the topics of homosexuality, abortion, and racism.

Hybels encouraged his audiences to follow Christ’s example of love in these difficult areas. He asked Taylor to commit itself to “being a truth and grace-giving community.

“If Taylor University and the surrounding area could be known as that community which learned how to do that high-wire act of being able at the same time to draw lines that honor scripture and to build bridges that honor love, Heaven will smile from the east to the west.”

Speaking during the fall spiritual renewal week, Campolo noted that “Jesus loved people who were dangerous to love, scary to love.”

Citing Christ’s example, Campolo challenged listeners to commit themselves to living lives of radical love. This is a common theme of Campolo’s speaking and writing, as were other themes he emphasized throughout the week: adopting an attitude of submission and surrender to the lordship of Christ, living in celebration of the kingdom of God, and bringing the message of jubilee to the poor and oppressed.

Campolo also addressed the danger of materialism in American society and the lack of true intimacy in relationships. He says, “This culture is dying because of a lack of intimacy in relationships. It hasn’t made us so much into sinners as it has made us into dead people.”

Hope may be found, he says, in the transforming grace of God’s Spirit.

The Taylor community responded well to the speakers’ challenge. Perhaps speaking for many of his peers, Jeff Ramsdale ’94 says, “It gave me a lot to think about,” says Jeff Ramsdale ’94.
Freshmen take the Upland plunge for Welcome Weekend
Incoming students learn that Taylor’s reputation for Christian service is well-founded

Welcome Weekend is traditionally the time when freshmen are oriented to the Taylor community. This past fall, over 400 incoming students were also introduced to Upland residents as they took part in a community service project dubbed “Freshmen Community Plunge.”

On their first Monday in Upland, students had lunch at Taylor Lake, where they were welcomed by Dr. Charles Jaggers, vice president for university relations, and representatives of Upland. They received engineer’s caps and “I Love Upland” buttons, then rode Wandering Wheels busses to their work sites.

Several students worked at the Upland train depot, scraping old paint. Others painted the police station and the town library. Work was done at the Upland Lions’ Club and Helping Hand as well. Students worked for about three hours before returning to campus.

“This is the first time students have been involved in this type of thing,” says Carol Sisson, director of orientation. “It’s something I had thought about for the last couple of years.” She was encouraged to incorporate the plunge into Welcome Weekend activities after attending a summer Association of Christians in Student Development conference.

About 30 Taylor staff and former faculty members helped supervise the student teams.

The work day gave students an opportunity to make new friends and to build class unity, Sisson says. “This class is enthused about working with each other. They also seem interested in getting involved with the community.”

Response from the community has been positive as well. According to Sisson, several letters praising the students for their work have been received. Recognizing individual students, some members of the community have asked them to come back to do more work—for pay this time.

“The project did a lot for community relations,” Sisson says. “I’d like to start making it a tradition for future classes.”

Bedi appointed to new leadership role
Former head of education now serves in academic affairs

Education has long been a part of Dr. Stephen Bedi’s life. This past summer he took another step in his involvement in education when he was named associate vice president for academic affairs and dean of curriculum and instruction. Bedi’s new responsibilities include administering the academic programs and curriculum at both Upland and Fort Wayne.

After graduating from Taylor in 1965, Bedi worked for 28 years in public education. He received the EdD degree from George Washington University, Washington, D.C., where he taught for the eight years prior to his return to Taylor in 1991.

For three years, Bedi served as associate dean of education, chair of the education department, and associate professor of education. He also directed the teacher education program.

Although he believes in the role of education, Bedi says there is more to it than that. “Young people have the empowerment of the Spirit that allows them to be distinctive in the areas to which God calls them.”
Fall season marks first year of full participation in MCC

Sophomore cross country runner James Njoroge sets the pace for Taylor athletes

Taylor made its full-fledged appearance in the Mid-Central conference (MCC) this year. The women’s teams began play in the MCC last year, while the men joined conference competition this fall.

Soccer: The Trojans were 1994 MCC co-champions with a 6-0-1 regular-season mark. In the MCC tournament, Taylor advanced to the championship match, only to be defeated by Indiana Wesleyan in a marathon 150-minute match that was finally decided on penalty kicks.

Junior Tony Bohl was named to the NAIA Honorable Mention All-America team.

Tennis: The Lady Trojans tennis squad became the first Taylor team ever to win a regular season or tournament title in the MCC. They now advance to the NAIA national tournament for the third time in four years.

Named to the MCC All-Conference team was duo Beth Prior, junior, and Dana Steckley, senior.

With no seniors and only two juniors, the men’s tennis team struggled to a 2-8 mark. A respectable showing in the MCC tournament earned Taylor fifth place.

Volleyball: The Lady Trojans posted a glittering 41-12 record (6-1 in MCC play) winning both regular season and tournament titles in the MCC. Natalie Stanislaw and Gretchen Newhouse, both juniors, and freshman Natalie Steele were named to the MCC All-Conference team. Steele was also named an NAIA All-American.

Cross Country: The men’s cross country team captured the MCC title, as well as three invitational titles, and went on to finish 19th in the NAIA.

Sophomore James Njoroge led the team. He was undefeated throughout the regular season and won individual titles at the Notre Dame Invitational, Indiana State Meet, and MCC. At the end of the season, Njoroge placed third at NAIA nationals in 24:29, earning his fourth All-America award, and became only the second Taylor runner in history to win the Indiana State title.

The women’s cross country team was rebuilding after graduation losses of four of its top seven runners, but still managed a respectable year. The Lady Trojans finished third in the MCC, won the 11-team Earlham Invitational meet, and finished second at two others.

Senior Amy Boothe qualified for nationals.

Football: Although the Trojans lost their final four games of the season to fall to 3-7, they showed improvement under new head coach Steve Wilt. Competing for the first year in the Mid States football association, the football team had a 2-3 record in league play, good for a third place tie.

Taylor’s record-setting receiver Doug Bonura was named to the NAIA All-America first team, defensive teammate J.J. Guedet to the Honorable Mention squad.

Athletic Hall of Fame inductees for 1994 include (from left) Jim Bushur ’89, Jodi (Williamson ’87) Worth and Sheldon Bassett ’62.

Sharathon meets fund raising goal

For 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, WBCL-90.3 FM, Fort Wayne, and simulcast station WBCY-89.5 FM, Archbold, Ohio, broadcast a popular mix of contemporary Christian music blended with traditional favorites. For two days each January, the station conducts an on-air fund drive called “Sharathon.”

This year’s goal was an ambitious $725,000, a $25,000 increase over last year’s Sharathon goal. Listeners came through for the station. Just three minutes before midnight on the second day of Sharathon, the goal was met.

New director of financial aid appointed

Alumna changes roles, campuses in accepting new position

Kim Barnett-Johnson took on new responsibilities in her service to Taylor in January, when she was named director of financial aid for the Fort Wayne campus. A 1989 graduate of Taylor, she had served as director of ethnic student programs on the Upland campus since 1990.

According to Barnett-Johnson, her desire to pursue an accounting position, and her enjoyment of interaction with students and parents were influencing factors in her decision to change roles.

In 1990, Barnett-Johnson became Taylor’s first director of ethnic student programs. When she arrived, the Minority Student Organization (MSO) was the main avenue of fellowship for Taylor’s ethnic student population. Under her leadership, MSO underwent not only a change of name, but a change of focus. AHANA (Africans, Hispanics, Asians, and Native Americans) emerged as a result. “I felt like the name ‘minority’ had too much of a negative stigmatism attached to it,” she says, adding that AHANA more accurately reflects the diverse attributes of the Taylor ethnic student body.

A Fort Wayne native, Barnett-Johnson currently lives in Upland with her husband Vincent, a campus safety officer on the Upland campus, and their one-year-old daughter Eboni.

In her new role, Kim fills a position vacated by Victoria Book, also a 1989 Taylor graduate.

Rejoice!

Two new facilities adorn the campus, the culmination and tangible result of the University’s recent capital campaign. The intangible results will be seen in the lives of tomorrow’s leaders.

After President Jay Kesler ’58 made the announcement at Homecoming ’93, those present stood to sing the doxology as an expression of praise to the Father who superintends the building of every life. They were celebrating a significant event in the life of Taylor University: successful completion of a three-year, $8.9 million capital campaign. The campaign raised funds for the construction, operational endowment, and equipping of two capital projects, the Rupp Communication Arts Center and the Randall Environmental Studies Center.

This past October, Dr. Dale Jackson, chair of the Taylor University communication arts department, was among those who cut the ribbon marking the official opening of the Rupp Communication Arts Center. Two years earlier, the late Dr. Walter Randall ’38 had performed similar duties at the dedication of the Randall Environmental Studies Center in October 1992.

These two facilities represent the University’s continued pursuit of excellence in fulfilling her mission. In the words of President Jay Kesler, they also represent “the unselfish commitment and total involvement of Taylor board members, alumni, friends, faculty and staff.”

The new buildings are tangible evidence of the campaign’s success. The campaign was a highly focused effort which targeted... select groups of donors. It is the largest-ever successful campaign in the University’s history. The new facilities enhance already-strong academic programs of the University with instructional space designed and constructed for specialized uses.

New this past fall, the $5.2 million Rupp Communication Arts Center brings together under one roof a department that had been scattered across several campus buildings. It includes the Mitchell Theatre, as well as a television studio, journalism lab, faculty offices, classrooms, and various other rooms and studios.

The $3.6 million Randall Environmental Studies Center opened to students in the fall of 1992. It houses a well-respected undergraduate program in environmental studies and features specialized labs, research and teaching labs, climate-controlled chambers, a seminar room, classrooms, and faculty offices.

If the buildings are tangible evidence of the benefits of the capital campaign’s completion, perhaps more intangible are the benefits that will be lived out in the lives of current and future students.

Addressing campaign donors, Dr. Jackson points out the significance of their gifts: “What you have helped us do, by participating in this adventure, is to ensure that Taylor will continue to prepare committed, skilled, Christian young people to take leadership roles in our communication-dominated world.”

It is a world, too, in which environmental issues will shape the actions of government, industry, and the general public for decades to come. Thanks to the involvement of many donors, says Dr. Edwin Squiers, professor of biology and director of the environmental studies program, the Randall Center offers Taylor students an understanding of the environmental problems facing the world today, and more. "[It gives] the next generation of problem-solvers the technical skills, knowledge, and conscience necessary to provide the kind of workable solutions that will improve the quality of life for all the world's residents."

Speaking of the culmination of the capital campaign, President Jay Kesler expresses his gratitude this way: "To realize that this has taken place in so short a time is just a miracle for which I would like to offer gratitude to the Lord himself. I believe that the whole spirit of giving began with the phrase, 'In the beginning, God created...'. Then God, who created, loved so much that he gave his only begotten Son. In gratitude for God's gift, then people have given. This campaign is not the result of any one individual; it's the result of many, many, of God's people; I thank God for you all."
Vision

Legacy
The success of the capital campaign is the result of much prayer and sacrifice on the part of many people. Four families in particular, however, leave their mark on Taylor University.

By their support of the recent capital campaign, or by lending their names to the capital projects completed, these families are associated in an integral way with the ongoing mission of Taylor University.

Leland and LaRita Boren

Upland is home to the corporate headquarters of the Avis Industrial Corporation. Leland Boren, president, and his wife LaRita, vice president, are long-time friends of the University and are involved with Taylor at almost every level. LaRita has served as a member of the Taylor University Board of Trustees for some 20 years.

"They are mom and dad to a lot of Taylor students," says Gene Rupp, vice president for development at Taylor. "They have helped many, many students."

In addition to their generous financial support of the University, the Borens involve themselves personally with students, serving as employers, mentors, and friends. They maintain close relationships with many faculty members, as well.

Avis Industrial Corporation played a crucial role in the success of the recent capital campaign in making the lead gift for the Randall Environmental Studies Center.

In a recent address to scholarship recipients, LaRita said, "Our prayer as we contribute is that the students will remember the gifts that they have received and the way that they have been given, and that someday, when they are blessed as we have been blessed, they will share with some other student the successes they have achieved."

Leland and LaRita Boren share smiles with a few of their Taylor "kids."
The late Dr. Walt '38 and Gwen (Niebel '40) Randall were loving, caring, committed Christians who practiced hospitality.

The Randalls returned to their alma mater almost 10 years ago after Walt concluded a brilliant career as a cardiovascular physiologist at the Stritch School of Medicine, Loyola University, Chicago. Walt's desire was to continue his research and to assist Taylor students. Gwen, Walt's helper, friend, and supporter, was a retired school teacher who substitute taught at the local middle school.

The driving force of Walt's life was research, and he shared that zeal with his students. "He had a love for students. He loved to see the excitement in their eyes when they would make some new discovery," says colleague and biology professor Dr. Timothy Burkholder.

To honor the eminent scientist and his wife, the University's Board of Trustees voted to name the facility the Randall Environmental Studies Center.

At its dedication, Walt said, "I give my heart and my mind to this facility, as well as my name, trusting it will be a place to unravel the mysteries that God has given us to solve."

Although Gwen died just four weeks before the October 1992 ceremony, Walt confided that he felt as if she was there with him.

The following August, it was he who joined her in the presence of the Lord.

The Rupp Communication Arts Center memorializes this Archbold, Ohio businessman and his life-long companion. Ora and Herma Rupp's children made a generous gift in memory of their parents for the construction of the facility. This gift was in turn matched by Sauder Woodworking and Archbold Container, also in honor of the couple who were known for their Christian love and commitment.
The Sauders can testify firsthand to the generosity and friendship of the Rupp family. Over 50 years ago, a devastating fire roared through Eric Sauder's woodworking shop in Archbold. Sauder had decided to close his business and look for other employment when Ora Rupp invested in the venture, and as a result, Sauder Woodworking is today a viable, healthy business. The Sauders' matching gift to the campaign stands as a tribute to the friendship of the two men.

While both Ora and Herma Rupp have passed from this life, their contributions to the community of Archbold and to Taylor University will testify to future generations of what God can do with hearts that are yielded to Him.

All five of the Rupp grandchildren are alumni of Taylor University.

Mrs. Mitchell, known as "Betty" to her friends, oversees the English Bonter Mitchell Foundation, established in honor of her father, Dr. Calvin English. He was associated with the Fort Wayne College of Medicine, which was a part of Taylor University in the late nineteenth century. Betty's mother, Mary Tower English, maintained ties with Taylor. English Hall is named in her honor.

Betty and her late husband William maintained a similarly close relationship with the University over many years, and Betty continues to support both the Upland and Fort Wayne campuses in a wide variety of projects and endeavors. Through her significant and ongoing philanthropic support of student scholarships, she has affected and will continue to affect the lives of many.

When Lilly Endowment, Inc. issued a challenge to the University to raise matching funds for enhancing the communication arts program, Betty was the first major donor to the project. Naming the theatre in honor of her and her husband is a fitting tribute.

Reflections

The opening of the Rupp Center represents the culmination of a 3-year $8.9 million campaign and is itself a reflection of God's faithfulness.

by Doug Marlow '81

The psalmist puts it this way: “Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it” (Psalm 127:1a,1v). These words resonate with those who provided leadership for the University’s recently-completed capital campaign. They are quick to credit the Lord with his blessing on the overall effort. The story of the campaign is one of sacrifice, challenge, commitment, and faithfulness on the part of many—and it is a story worth telling.

A story of vision.

President Jay Kesler referenced this fact in making a point to a group of Taylor stu-
Well-equipped labs enhanced the learning experience.

Students gathered for a leadership seminar. Distinguishing between leadership (a quality) and management (a science), he said, "Leadership has vision; management deals with realistic data." Noting the campaign was then nearing its goal, Kesler explained that its success had not always been assured. "At the outset of the campaign, virtually everyone said 'it can't be done.'"

Designed to be a "targeted" low-visibility effort with limited publicity, it would concentrate on a select group of major donors, foundations, and individuals. Even so, the task of raising $8.9 million in three years seemed a bit more than daunting for an institution of Taylor's size. However, as Kesler reminded the students, "Leadership has faith; management has facts." The University's Board of Trustees called upon this faith when they voted to embark upon the capital campaign in the fall of 1990. The campaign sought funds for construction, operational endowment, and equipping of two major facilities: the Randall Environmental Studies Center and the Rupp Communication Arts Center. Objective facts seemed to warn of impossibilities, but in the end, faith carried the day.

A story of leadership

The lead gift for the campaign came from Avis Industrial Corporation, whose corporate headquarters are located just across the street from Taylor's Upland campus. Leland and LaRita Boren, president and vice president of Avis Industrial Corporation, respectively, are long-time friends and benefactors of the University. Both have served Taylor in a behind-the-scenes fashion. In addition, LaRita has provided leadership as a member of the Board of Trustees.

"The Borens deserve tremendous thanks from all the constituents of Taylor," says Gene Rupp, vice president for development. "LaRita has given of herself in so many ways. She's had many students work for her; she has helped students with tuition dollars; she has been a mentor and spiritual leader to many Taylor coeds. LaRita is a very humble servant of God."

With a $1 million challenge gift toward... the environmental studies center, the Borens set the campaign on its way to success.

It is a story of challenge

The challenge Avis Industrial Corporation issued was for the remaining members of the University's Board of Trustees to collectively match the gift amount. They proved equal to the challenge and met, then exceeded the goal set before them, donating more than $1 million to the campaign’s goal and accounting for 23 percent of total funds given for the effort.

A story of sacrifice

Another group targeted by the campaign was faculty, administration, and staff of the University. They were invited to special dinners where the goal of the campaign was outlined and opportunities to participate extended. Noting that few employees of small private Christian colleges complain of being overpaid, campaign leadership compliments the group of 311 part- and full-time employees, representing 72 percent participation, who collectively pledged $348,250 to the capital campaign and directed another $249,341 to the operating budget over a three-year period.

A story of commitment

In her near-150-year history, the University has never depended upon one major benefactor for financial support. Instead, in God’s providence, gifts have been received from a number of generous donors. This campaign was no exception. Campaign leadership compiled a list of 60 alumni and friends with the potential to make significant gifts. Among those who gave generously were the Rupp and Sauder families, who honored the memory of Ora and Herma Rupp in the naming of the communication arts center.

A story of faithfulness

A special challenge was issued to alumni of the Communication Arts program. Alumni were invited to contribute gifts of any amount.
but were challenged to "purchase" a theatre seat with a gift of $1200. Over $250,000 was donated to the communication arts center by this effort. Total alumni giving to the communication arts project, not counting that from alumni trustees, faculty, or staff, was over $564,000.

A story of foundational support

Giving by charitable foundations played a significant role in the success of the campaign. Early pledges were received from Mrs. Betty Mitchell of the English Bonter Mitchell Foundation, for whom the Mitchell Theatre is named, and from the Indianapolis-based Lilly Endowment, Inc. Later in the campaign, The Kresge Foundation of Troy, Mich., contributed a significant gift toward the completion of the campaign.

_A story of change_

The original $8.3 million goal was twice revised upward to a final goal of $8.9 million as midway through the campaign the original architects for the communication arts facility went out of business. This, and adjustments for floor space added to the project to service the rapidly increasing student enrollment in the communication arts program, necessitated an upward revision of the goal.

_Unless the Lord builds the house..._

There is much for which to be thankful, campaign leadership says. The Randall Environmental Studies Center opened to students in the fall of 1992; the Rupp Communication Arts Center opened to students this past fall. Both facilities will be employed to train future Christian leaders well into the 21st century.

For these blessings, and for so many others, campaign leadership readily admits dependence upon God.

They quote Psalm 118:23, “This is the Lord’s doing; it is marvelous in our eyes.”

Winter 1995 / TAYLOR 23
hal l e n g e
loaves and too small fish

The important question, then as now, is: “Is he at the picnic?”

by Dr. Jay Kesler

At the end of a successful capital campaign that has resulted in adding two major buildings to our campus, my mind immediately goes to the scripture for a parallel experience. For many of us I suspect there is a need to feel that we are doing the work of God, as did people of old. For me, at least, I know this is true. One thinks of the building of the temple by Solomon or the restoration of the walls of Jerusalem by Nehemiah, but neither quite captures the Taylor situation. Certainly sacrifice, determination and team work are hallmarks of these accounts and they do characterize our efforts together as a Taylor family—students, faculty, alumni, friends, parents, staff and administration. We can share satisfaction at a great task completed with cooperative effort and sacrifice. However, there is another element in the Taylor saga, and I find it in the miracle of the loaves and fishes.

Resources multiplied

Whenever we look at the challenges facing Taylor and then do a “needs assessment,” feasibility study, environmental scan, computer model, or any of the expected preparatory exercise, it’s like the disciples looking at the crowd on the hillside and concluding, “We can’t possibly, even with total personal commitment, accomplish the task” . . . then the Lord takes over. We get organized, we pray, we divide what fishes and bread we have, we move out among the crowd and somehow the resources multiply.

Every time I walk the campus (and I do it often) I recommit myself to never complaining of God’s provision. From extremely modest beginnings, today we enjoy one of the finest small college facilities anywhere. It is hard to imagine that Taylor was once referred to as “The Methodist poor college.” We are named for a rugged, mountaineer Methodist circuit rider who rose from his rural frontier beginnings to be a missionary bishop in Africa. Taylor University has emulated Bishop William Taylor’s life—sincere, committed, abhorrent of ostentation, focused on the task, blessed beyond personal resources and still looking for the next challenge from the top of the last hill climbed.

Taylor has stood through a civil war, two world wars, two major depressions, numerous national conflicts and economic recessions, the birth and eclipse of theological modernism, the liberal/fundamentalist controversies, the 60s, and, in retrospect, the short life of Marxism. The one central constant and core value has been an almost desperate reliance on the central truth that “Jesus Christ is indeed the son of God come in the flesh.” A commitment to the trustworthy record of the Bible as the word of God and an obedience to the Great Commission has kept us over these years.

New challenges

Now we face new challenges as we approach the 21st century. There are more people on the hillside than ever before. There seem to be less fish and bread than in yesterday. Yet, we have the same—even more experienced—Savior in our midst. He is well acquainted with our requests; he assesses with greater scrutiny than any accrediting agency. He watches for outcomes as he once approached fruit trees looking for fruit. It is he who prospers or casts into the fire. Our future is now, as in the past, in his hands. Our task is fidelity to our mission. My personal bias is that God is preparing us to be worthy of even greater blessing. I am convinced that many people are praying to God about their stewardship and that God will put Taylor in their priorities in his time.

In our midst

Taylor’s past, present and future are all dependent on whether or not he comes to the picnic, just as it was on that hillside beside the Sea of Galilee. If he is absent, academic excellence, cleverness, planning, government assistance, total quality management, even retrenchment, will not meet the challenge. With him in our midst and in charge of the plans and the people, all the metaphors work. The temple is built, the walls are restored, the people are fed and Taylor University thrives into the 21st and 22nd centuries . . . and beyond.

Jay Kesler ’58 is president of Taylor University.
The Taylor University National Alumni Association honored 13 individuals in 1994 who in various ways represent the spirit of commitment and service that is Taylor.

Connard Rehling
Legion of Honor

Golf Digest has described Conrad "Connie" Rehling ’43 as a "Teacher of Champions," and the Professional Golf Association (PGA) recently named him a "master professional."

Connard has received the highest honors of the professional golf world, yet his heart has been and is still in reaching those he teaches with the love of Christ (see "Playing by the Rules," Taylor, Winter 1994). Since retiring from coaching at the university level in 1988, Connie has taught disabled persons the game of golf. He currently serves as national chairman for the Physically Disabled Golfers of America, as well as a member of the steering committee for Special Olympic golfers.

Connard is only the eleventh recipient of the alumni association’s prestigious Legion of Honor, its highest award.
Bonnie (Weaver ’44) Odle
Distinguished Alumna for Service to Taylor University

Bonnie (Weaver ’44) Odle’s involvement with the University goes back to 1917, when her mother arrived on the campus as a student. Bonnie’s parents were married by Taylor president Monroe Vayhinger; she met her own husband, Don ’42, while they were both Taylor students.

She and Don have made their home on the edge of the campus for years. “We have benefitted immensely from being in this place,” she says. As has Taylor by her presence. “For 35 years, I don’t think there was a week we were here that we didn’t have Taylor alumni and friends into our home,” says Don. “She has entertained so many Taylor guests.” With Bonnie’s support, Don launched “Venture for Victory” and the sports evangelism movement at Taylor.

Rick Florian ’85
Distinguished Young Alumnus
for Professional Achievement

Rick Florian ’85 has achieved international exposure, a wide following among teenagers, and industry recognition as lead vocalist for the contemporary Christian music group White Heart. In 1993, White Heart received a Grammy nomination, and they have received several Dove award nominations and been at the top of the Contemporary Christian Music Readers’ Poll.

“I’ve probably digressed more from my major than anyone in the history of Taylor,” he says, noting he graduated with a biology degree. No matter the avenue of service, Rick carries on a Taylor tradition of using one’s talents in service to Christ.

Amy (Hunt ’84) Johnson
Distinguished Young Alumna
for Personal Achievement

Crossing racial, cultural, generational, and socio-economic barriers in establishing relationships with inner city children and their parents has presented a challenge for Amy (Hunt ’84) Johnson.

As director of the Neighborhood Learning Center, an outreach program to inner city children in Washington, D.C., Amy has proved equal to the challenge. She admits she didn’t go to Washington looking for this type of challenge, however.

Amy left a promising job with a political lobbying firm to provide interim leadership for the Center—a six-month commitment at most. That was nearly eight years ago. She’s directed the program ever since.

“It’s what God wanted me to do,” she says. “Not what I thought I was going to do.”

Devee Boyd ’69
Distinguished Alumnus
for Professional Achievement

Service is a way of life in the Ralph and Ruth Boyd family, for whom Taylor’s Boyd Building and Grounds Facility is named. Devee Boyd ’69 exemplifies the kind of service-orientation he learned from his parents, and which his Taylor years reinforced.

A medical doctor, Devee has used his gifts in service to others. For five years, he and his wife, Jan, served as medical missionaries to Zimbabwe.

Devee now operates a medical clinic in an isolated mountain community in Oregon. He practices what he terms “womb to tomb medicine,” caring for those in need—both physically and spiritually.

Nancy (Verdell ’65) Moller
Distinguished Parent

Nancy (Verdell ’65) Moller was recognized last May for her devotion to Christian higher education and her significant contribution as a parent.

Her son Matt’s graduation last year from Taylor marked neither the beginning nor the end of her involvement with Taylor University. Nancy is a past member of the National Alumni Council, and currently serves as a member of the Parents’ Association Cabinet. This past fall, she accepted a position at Taylor as head of the education department. Here, she combines professionalism with sensitivity and caring, traits she has honed as a parent.

Harry Haakonsen ’63
Distinguished Alumnus
for Professional Service

Before his death on February 2, 1995, Dr. Harry Haakonsen ’63 was relentless in his efforts to promote ethical interactions between people and their environment. His was a respected voice in the academic community, as well as in his state’s legislature.

As professor of chemistry and director of the Center for the Environment at Southern Connecticut State University, he helped craft his school’s undergraduate academic program in environmental studies, as well as his state’s environmental efforts. Haakonsen said his “modest accomplishments” grew out of a strong sense of Christian service reinforced during his years at Taylor.
Kathy (Lauber ’60) Blume
Distinguished Alumna
for Personal Achievement

Kathy Lauber Blume graduated from Taylor in 1960 with no idea of the heartaches that lay in store for her: a handicapped child, divorce, single parenthood and poverty, among others. Through it all, she says, she has experienced God’s faithfulness. She is careful to give him praise.

She has since remarried (her husband Bob Blume ’62 is also a Taylor alumnus), is mother to five sons, and today enjoys a national speaking ministry, encouraging others who face difficult times.

Kathy describes her life as a stained glass window: “a bunch of broken pieces that God has chosen to put together and through which to radiate the very love of Jesus Christ.”

Mark Cosgrove
Distinguished Professor

Mark Cosgrove, psychology professor at Taylor University since 1976, is recognized as a gifted intellectual and widely-published author. In 1988, his book, The Amazing Body Human, was named Campus Life magazine’s “Editor’s Choice Book of the Year.” As his colleagues and students testify, he models a commitment to excellence both within and without the classroom.

According to Mark, he is in the business of broadening people’s view of reality. “The call is to see a larger picture instead of momentary pleasure and pain. We Christians should teach the larger picture. That’s what our Christian university is all about.”

Mark is the first faculty member to be a second-time recipient of this award. He was first so honored in 1988.

Lisa Miller ’88
Distinguished Young Alumna
for Professional Achievement

Lisa Miller ’88 says she was a senior at Taylor University when she received God’s call to full-time ministry. For the past four years, she has served as community outreach director at Akron Youthquake Ministries in Ohio, an outreach effort geared to inner city youth.

“Jesus gave me a compassion for the children and teenagers that I meet. He deserves the credit,” she says. “The programs we have been running in Akron are miracles of God.” Lisa is responsible for three “Time Out for Life” programs and originated the “Teen Adventure” program which offers youth an alternative to gang violence.

Gaylen Swartz
Distinguished Friend

Gaylen Swartz’s name may not be familiar to many, but his work certainly is. Gaylen is general superintendent for Furman Steury Contractors, and in that position has had responsibility for the construction of the Zondervan Library, Smith-Hermanson Music Building, Randall Environmental Studies Center, Rupp Communication Arts Center, the Boyd maintenance facility, as well as the remodeling of Swallow Robin Hall, Sickler Hall, and Helena Memorial Hall.

Gaylen is a dedicated worker and a committed Christian. His contributions to Taylor are evident, as is his obvious dedication to Christ.

LaRita Boren
Honorary Alumna

“When I speak to young people, I encourage them to invest their lives in something significant—something larger than they are. For me, this is Taylor University.” So says LaRita Boren, vice president of Avis Industrial Corporation and long-time member of Taylor University’s Board of Trustees.

In addition to her service on the Board, LaRita has been involved in the University in many other ways: providing employment to needy students, serving as an encourager, confidant, and prayer warrior to faculty and staff, and as a role model for the women of the University as a businesswoman, fundraiser, speaker, mother and grandmother.

Brian Shepherd ’87
Distinguished Young Alumnus
for Personal Achievement

Brian Shepherd ’87 is a highly successful cross country coach at West Noble High School in Ligonier, Indiana. He has been voted All-Area Cross Country Coach of the Year for three consecutive years, and in 1993, led his team to its first undefeated season in 19 years.

He uses his talents professionally as well as personally to reach out to others. He has organized a local track club to provide children with a productive activities during the summer.

Brian attributes his success in part to the teaching philosophy he saw modeled by his coaches at Taylor, now his modus operandi as an elementary school teacher and as a coach: “I expect a lot of my kids. And I give everything I’ve got to them.”

Mark Day ’77 exchanged his job as a fire-fighting paratrooper to accept a two-year assignment with the U.S. Peace Corps.

Gomez works for Peace

Miguel Gomez has just finished his first year of a two-year commitment in the U.S. Peace Corps. He is a volunteer in the Andean nation of Bolivia. His occupation is agriculture extension, and he works with a farming cooperative with 35 members of Quechua descent. Very few of them speak Spanish so Miguel is “forced” to learn their language and culture.

Some of Miguel’s specific work projects include introducing better ways of planting and caring for home gardens. He is also involved in a soil conservation project which involves his community building a defensive wall in a river to protect their crops and retain more farming land. He also teaches English with plans to broadcast on the radio.

Miguel’s address is Cuerpo de Paz, Casilla #278, Cochabamba, BOLIVA, SOUTH AMERICA.

Mark Day was selected by his fellow teachers to receive a Golden Apple Award for being one of the outstanding educators of the year in the Westerville (OH) school district. He has taught at Westerville South HS for 17 years and is also teaching evening classes at Otterbein College. Mark and Jann (Eisenmann) have 3 children: Jansen (13), Meredith (10) and Jesse (8). They reside at 1335 Vans Valley Rd., Galena, OH 43021.

Penny (Parkin) Dimnick has earned her doctorate in music from Ball State Univ. and has accepted a 2 yr. faculty appointment in the Faculty in Residence Program at Butler Univ. She teaches music ed. and is husband John live with their 2 sons, John (8) and Joshua (5), at 630 W. Nancian (Davis) Hall ’71 led a team of 17 Wisconsin students last summer to Australia on a Friendship Caravan under the People to People Program begun by President Dwight D. Eisenhower began in 1956. Hall had the unique idea of making a peace and friendship quilt. Each of her Student Ambassadors designed one square to be signed by someone representing international goodwill. Among those signing the quilt were: Dan Jansen, Olympic gold medalist; Tommy Thompson, governor of Wisconsin; Peter Jennings, ABC News anchor; and many more. In Australia, the Student Ambassadors presented their quilt in the towns and cities through which they traveled and asked mayors and city officials to sign it. The quilt was the only one made in the United States on behalf of the People to People Program. After three weeks of travel, they presented the quilt to the Minister of Arts and Education in Canberra.

In addition to her involvement in this international friendship initiative, Hall is a former teacher of gifted and talented students and is also a prolific writer. In the last year she has written 600 poems, 15 children’s stories and six songs and hymns.

Daughter, Classmate, Friend, Child of God

O n Saturday, April 16, 1994, Taylor sophomore Jenafar T. Ruehman of Rochelle, Ill., and four classmates were involved in an automobile accident that would claim Jenafar’s earthly life two days later and send the entire campus into mourning.

In her two years at Taylor, Jenafar had touched the lives of wingmates on Second West Olson, of friends all across campus, and of those in the surrounding community for whom she performed volunteer service through Taylor World Outreach.

On May 20, 1994 she celebrated what would have been her 20th birthday in the presence of her Lord.
Let us break ground together on our knees

Excerpts from comments made at the May 1993, Rupp Center groundbreaking ceremony

By Dr. Dale Jackson, chair
Communication Arts Department

In order to put this event into some historical perspective, I brought along a memo addressed to the vice president for academic affairs. In it the dean is asked to appoint a fine arts building committee to include representatives of the music, speech and drama, and art departments. The memo is dated October 8, 1969.

A few of you remember the woman who during the 60s chaired what was then called the speech and drama department, Gladys Greathouse. I recently found this note in her handwriting. It was attached to the first list of space needs that was compiled for this building. It's dated January 12, 1970, and it concludes with the words, "Luck to you! Call me back from the grave, will you?" She died in 1980, and her spirit participates with us today.

But this groundbreaking isn't about the past. It's about a future that extends beyond any of us here. The communication arts department has no bitterness about the long wait, because we have not been waiting. We've been building a diverse program that, in the 23 years since that memo, has been equipping Christian students to take places of leadership in a communication-dominated world.

When this memo was written, the department had 38 majors. Today there are over 120. In fact, if this building had been built following any of the previous planning discussions, it would be grossly inadequate for today's and tomorrow's needs. We won't question God's timing.

In my mind's eye
I've walked through this communication arts center a hundred times in my imagination and I've seen students dressed in their Sunday best anxiously waiting their turn to deliver a classroom speech; I have seen them standing in full costume taking deep breaths, preparing for a stage entrance; I have seen them working at 4:00 on Friday mornings putting the finishing touches on the Echo; and I have seen them sharpening their skills in the radio and television studios.

This building means that for the first time all these diverse parts of a coherent curriculum will fit together physically under one roof instead of just theoretically on paper. It means that the specialized needs of media and theatre will be met by spaces designed for those purposes rather than adapted from other uses.

We know this new facility will bring new opportunities and challenges, and we welcome those.

With gratitude
We want to thank all of you who have brought us to this moment: the Board of Trustees for their leadership and donations; Jay and Daryl for their fund-raising efforts and guidance in the planning; Gene Rupp, Chip Jaggers, Tom Beers, and all the development and alumni staff people who took on the incredible task of raising nearly $5 million; and to all of those who have donated and pledged large amounts and small, thank you.

We salute Fanning/Howey Associates for their work on the design, and especially Mark Ranyak, who has listened to us and taken our input seriously. The design embodies our dreams, both in form and function.

Most of all, we give thanks to our Heavenly Father, for this and all the unsearchable riches of his grace.

Rock of remembrance
The cornerstone of the building will read, "In the beginning was the Word." That will be a reminder to us and to future generations that the ultimate act of communication was Christ himself, our cornerstone. He didn't come to talk about his father. He was, according to the apostle John, the expression, the embodiment, of God's message to humankind. Our prayer is that all who work and grow in this building will learn to become more effective expressions of hope and redemption to a world in need.

Finally, we must remember that when this facility is completed and fully functioning, the art department will still be waiting for the completion of their dream, that began for them with that same 1969 memo. We hope that process won't extend into the future as far as it has into the past.
It's not only what you know, it's Who.

We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers; remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father.

— 1 Thessalonians 1:2-3

Thank you for your generous and sacrificial giving.
