Finally, brothers, whatever is true, whatever is noble, whatever is right, whatever is pure, whatever is lovely, whatever is admirable—if anything is excellent or praiseworthy—think about such things.

Philippians 4:8

We can only know one thing about God—that He is what we are not. Our wretchedness alone is an image of this. The more we contemplate it, the more we contemplate Him.

Simone Weil

The idealists dream and the dream is told, and the practical men listen and ponder and bring back the truth and apply it to human life, and progress and growth and higher human ideals come into being and so the world moves ever on.

Anna Howard Shaw

The important thing is not to stop questioning. Curiosity has its own reason for existing. One cannot help but be in awe when he contemplates the mysteries of eternity, of life, of the marvelous structure of reality. It is enough if one tries merely to comprehend a little of this mystery every day. Never lose a holy curiosity.

Spring break. It’s perhaps the most anticipated week of second semester. Whether we lay on the beach, made some extra money, slept the week away, dedicated it to serving others through mission trips or did anything except school work, we can all recall our favorite spring break memories.

“In 1993 I went with Taylor World Outreach to Miami, Fla., and helped clean up after Hurricane Andrew. The best part was the camaraderie with students, the fun trip there and working together.”

Kelly Goossen ’93, Indianapolis, Ind.

“Relaxing and laughing with friends at the beach. I stayed with my friend, and her parents let us go dancing.”

Patty (Link) Tarlach ’85, Batavia, Ill.
“In 1974 four friends and I drove a Ford Torino all night to Florida during the energy crisis. We had to stop to buy gas whenever the tank got to half because we couldn’t get gas otherwise. We were crammed in the car, and I had to sit on the hump.”
   Dale Grimes ’76, Coral Gables, Fla.

“I went home and worked at a community hospital where I was a receptionist and telephone operator. My desk was down the hall from the x-ray room, and I thought it was funny that guys didn’t know how to sit in hospital gowns.”
   Sandra Harris ’77, Liberty Center, Ind.

“My sophomore year I traveled with the gospel team to New York City and did a one-hour concert in Union Station. We performed from an open balcony on the second floor. Thousands of people came through; some would stop and wave, then they’d be on their way.”
   John Wheeler ’54, Springboro, Ohio

“I worked at a hospital in Marion, Ind., and put patients’ medical records on microfilm because they didn’t have enough room for all the paper. I tried to get some rest and some money.”
   Rachel (Sypolt) Bailey ’71, Bradenton, Fla.

“I went with Youth With A Mission to Kosovo and did outreaches. It was really intense. When we arrived it was cold so we were totally jetlagged, freezing and trying to minister to people who didn’t speak our language. God always came through, though. It was really awesome to do it with other Taylor students and get to know each other better.”
   Rebekah Burtness ’03, Madison, Wis.
A grand entrance

On Dec. 16, 2004, the Hodson Dining Commons Atrium was dedicated. It was named affectionately for Arthur x’34 and Nelle (Leisman ’43) Hodson, long-time friends of Taylor University and the Upland community. The $730,000 project added 2,174 square feet to the north side of the existing Hodson Dining Commons and renovated an existing 2,019. The atrium features a fireplace, grand entrance, handicapped-accessible restrooms and new storage areas for students’ backpacks and coats. Dedicated “in honor of the students who pass through,” the vestibule will serve as a place for fellowship and gathering for years to come.
A personal reflection ...

I love nature. I embrace every sunset, every snowflake, every star granted me. But seldom do I schedule an appointment to do just that—to absorb the Earth's splendor. On a recent trip to San Diego, Calif., I was granted ample time to bask in the exquisite glory of nature, our Creator's canvas.

As I dangled my feet over the edge of the harbor, I noticed a glimpse of my reflection in the tranquil water. It acted as a mirror, illustrating my likeness, as well as His incredible majesty and creativity.

So, too, in life we are called to reflect the face of Christ through our lives. The following features are a small sampling of Taylor individuals who have done just that.

It is our hope that as they share their personal experiences, you will be encouraged and inspired by their examples.

This issue is dedicated to the thousands of alumni who take time to observe Christ through the delicate details of nature and reflect Him in and through their lives.

Blessings to you—

New life blooms in backyards everywhere this time of year, but with the new growth often come weeds. The same is true for our magazine. Although we're continuing to grow and sprout new ideas, we still need to be reminded of some of the pesky weeds that need pulled. We want to hear from you; let us know your perspectives on the magazine. After all, there's always room for new growth.
Font faux pas

Great magazine, but the light gray print on the white background is very hard to read. For us, black print is so much easier to see.

Jerry and Mary Coil
Fort Wayne, Ind.

As usual I was excited to get my copy of the Taylor magazine. However, when I got to the series of articles on the seasons, I found that it was very difficult to read. The gray against white is just not a color combination that old eyes can read. Is time taken to print a draft copy to see if the printed result is the same as the screen? It would be time well-taken to ensure that an excellent article is not passed over because it couldn’t be read. Thanks for the good work, and I look forward to the next issue. Now I’ll go find the brightest light I can to read the articles in this issue.

Re: pages 14, 16-18, 20-23

While it may be an artistic success, I will never know what good things were on these pages. When displayed on a colored background, the font chosen for the above pages is essentially illegible to these 80-year-old eyes.

May I register a plea for legibility?

P. Kenneth Morse ’45
Bellevue, Fla.

You’re right. We goofed. You are not the only ones who have mentioned the light gray font being difficult to read: we received several letters identifying the problem.

We sincerely apologize. We chose this font for a clean, crisp look that matched the theme of the magazine. We failed to take into account that the thinness harmed readability. Please rest assured that we will be more careful in the future about fonts used. Thank you for being patient with us as we continue to promote Taylor in print!

Winter wonderland

I got a kick out of the perspectives section about J-term and remembered taking statistics during interterm of 1982. The record wind-chill of −60 degrees while walking from Samuel Morris Hall to the Hodson Dining Commons was incredible.

I love the magazine. Keep up the good work.

Kind compliments

Thank you for the terrific issue of the Taylor magazine. Quality content, writing and graphics from front to back.

It’s enough to make an alum proud ...

Blessings to you.

You are doing a good job with the alumni magazine. I was glad to see the article in the most recent issue about Joel Sonnenberg. I went out and bought the book! It is good to let people know about people like Joel and the woman who has MS who was featured in the same issue.

We’re always excited to receive complimentary responses to our work; however, it’s the criticism that keeps us humble and striving to do even better. Thank you for your encouragement, as well as pointing out the areas in which we need to improve. You’re keeping us on our toes!

Reaching out around the world

When the tsunami smashed into 12 countries on the upper rim of the Indian Ocean on Dec. 26, 2004, its impact was felt half-way around the world in Upland, Ind.

For Sheena Ilangakoon-Perera ’08, the cancellation of reservations at a beachside resort proved to be life-saving. “We were contemplating going on (December) 26th or 27th to the Yala Safari Beach Hotel (in southern Sri Lanka),” said Perera’s mother, Sheami, in an e-mail message to friends in Upland. “(At the) last minute, I cancelled the reservation for no apparent reason. (The) Yala Beach Hotel was completely destroyed—no trace at all ... I weep thinking, ‘It could have been us.’”

Whitney Fry ’03, now working toward her master’s degree at Tulane University, visited Sri Lanka and Thailand in January. She said while the devastation was unbelievable, it was the people who left the most lasting impression upon her.

“So many people were rebuilding, if they had any structure left to rebuild on,” Fry said. “And some were searching through rubble to find something that might be theirs.”

But even more unbearable for Fry were the makeshift morgues and seas of graphic corpse photos. “Each ... page of a person had a shot of their full body, their face and any jewelry they were wearing that might be used to identify them. It was horrific,” she said. “I can’t imagine trying to find a family member like this.”

Along with other Taylor alumni who have since visited the affected areas, a group of Taylor students and professors headed by Drs. Matt Delong, Ken Kiers and Hank Voss plan to go to Colombo, Sri Lanka, in late May to participate in rebuilding efforts.

Additionally, over $14,000 was collected from students, faculty and staff during J-Term and distributed between the Pereras’ churches, Youth For Christ Sri Lanka and Youth for Christ India.

“Please pray that the aid coming into Sri Lanka will be distributed responsively and effectively,” Perera said. “Also, we need God intervening to heal emotional hurts of the people whose lives have been devastated. (It is) something that He only can do.” — Jim Garringer
What goes around comes around

To most Taylor students and alumni, "Vayhinger" is simply the name for the Taylor University circle, formerly known as "the loop." On Oct. 24, 2002, the circle was dedicated and named for the University's 17th president (1908-1921), Dr. Monroe Vayhinger. Unfortunately, many Taylor employees, students and alumni are not aware of the legacy of Vayhinger and his vast impact on Taylor University. However, a recent turn of events may shed some light on Vayhinger's administration and other significant periods in Taylor's history.

At the time of the dedication, Dr. John Vayhinger '39, grandson of former President Vayhinger, and his wife Ruth (Imler '39) traveled to Upland from their home in Colorado Springs, Colo., to honor his grandfather. While at Taylor, Dr. Vayhinger donated a file containing letters from his grandfather's administration. Though small, this donation became one of the few documents in the archives from that period, due to a fire in 1960 that destroyed H. Maria Wright Hall, then Taylor's administration building.

Intrigued by Dr. Vayhinger's donation, Dr. Robert Lay, associate professor of Christian education, contacted Dr. Vayhinger regarding the existence of additional materials related to his grandfather and the possibility of his lending, or even donating, them to Taylor's archives.

Dr. Vayhinger agreed, and on Jan. 3, 2005, the historic documents arrived in Upland. Included were photographs of Taylor basketball teams from the early 1910s and the president's wife, Culla. The materials also contained books from the president's library, including his personal Bible, many notes, letters, diplomas and scores of sermon manuscripts. The collection also includes the deed to the Upland campus property.

The donated materials will become part of the Zondervan Library special collections, while the photographs were scanned and returned to the Vayhinger family.

Inaugural graduation ceremony

It was not your typical commencement ceremony — but they were not your typical college graduates.

Taylor University held its first Master of Business Administration (MBA) commencement on Dec. 10, 2004, for the program's first 15 graduates. While the program's inaugural commencement marked a departure from Taylor's traditional springtime ceremonies, the graduates still received the traditional diplomas and servant towels.

"The students completed the program on November 30," said Larry Rottmeyer, head of the MBA program. "The students really wanted a separate event for their commencement from the graduation in May," he continued. "We are able to create community consistent with the University's mission. Their sense of community is similar to the one created by the dorm floors and wings. They live their MBA experience together."

Truly they did. Through the course of four four-month semesters, the group took all their classes together, met for small-group interaction, e-mailed and telephoned each other and took an August trip to England and Ireland.

"I really got to be good friends with several classmates; I had not counted on that at all," said Grace Guedet '97, business administration graduate and charter member of the MBA program.

"We are more interested in personal and professional growth of our students and developing life-long relationships with them than we are in numbers growth," said Rottmeyer. "We are interested in helping our students change lives." — Jim Garnner
Faculty accolades

It’s not every day college students have the opportunity to interact with published authors, literary critics and biblical scholars. But for Taylor students, it's a regular occurrence. Truly we are blessed with faculty who take their profession and their faith very seriously, and it shows. The following is just a sampling of the high achievements reached by our faculty each year.

Thom Satterlee, assistant professor of English, published his poem "Habitus" in Southwest Review. Also, he published seven translations of poems by Danish poet Annemette Kure Anderson in the literary journal Osiris. He received funding from the Danish Arts Agency to support a summer trip to Denmark.

Dr. Jim Spiegel, professor of philosophy and religion, gave the keynote address entitled “The Role of Virtue in Moral Theory” at the Southeastern Undergraduate Philosophy Conference at Covenant College on Feb. 25, 2005. His book, How to be Good in a World Gone Bad is a finalist for one of the Christianity Today 2005 book of the year awards.

Dr. JoAnn Rediger, associate professor of music, led the Taylor Chorale in a featured performance at the Festival of Faith at Second Presbyterian Church in Indianapolis, Ind. In keeping with the theme of “Why Doesn’t God Do Something? – The Reality of Evil and the Love of God,” the Chorale performed a program entitled “Faith in Time of Suffering,” including Rene Clausen’s Kyrie from Memoria, Randall Stroope’s The Conversations of Saul and Leo Nestor’s The Call. Students also participated in a plenary session with Rev. Dr. Cynthia Rigby, W.C. Brown associate professor of theology, Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary.

Dr. Pamela Medows, associate professor of education, presented in-service workshops as a part of new teacher orientation at the international school in Tegucigalpa, Honduras.

Gary Friesen, director of academic technology, oversaw the installation of DyKnow Vision, an interactive learning system that uses thirty wireless tablet-PCs. Using the pen-based tablet-PCs, students interact with the professor’s notes, add their own, take instant polls, submit homework solutions—all of which can be accessed by the student from his or her own computer.

Dr. Donna Downs, assistant professor and print media adviser for communication arts, completed her dissertation on “A Study of Jay Kesler’s Leadership During His 15-year Tenure at Taylor University.” She will graduate from Ball State University on May 7, 2005, with an Ed.D. in adult, community and higher education with a cognate in journalism.
Records are made to be broken. Liz Plass '05 did just that when she hit a two-pointer in the last ten seconds of a Taylor women's basketball game in February, shattering Rachel Haley's career-scoring record.

The 6'0" forward thrilled the home crowd, scoring 19 points in the game, none bigger than the last two. "I just figured that with Coach pointing at me and then pointing at the basket she wanted me to shoot, so I did," she said. The shot went in, bringing the crowd to its feet in applause and propelling Plass past the previous 13-year-old mark.

This isn’t the only record Plass holds. She set the single game and single season scoring records in 2004 (38 points and 680 respectively) and also holds the mark for most free throws in a game (18) and season free throw percentage (.879). - Justin Potts '05

Trojan basketball

Men's basketball: The men's basketball team ended the regular season with a record of 23-10, 12-4 in the Mid-Central Conference (MCC). They won the MCC tournament championship with a thrilling last-second 56-55 victory over Huntington. The win earned the Trojans their third consecutive trip to the NAIA National Tournament in Branson, Mo. In the opening round, they battled back from an 18-point deficit but in the end came up short against Mid-America Nazarene, 71-66. The Trojans' Eric Ford '06 was selected as a MCC first team honoree. Mike Parsons '05 and Doug Bell '06 received kudos for their third team selection.

Women's basketball: The women's basketball team concluded its season with a 23-10 record, 11-5 in the MCC. The Lady Trojans tied for second in the MCC regular season race. The team received an at-large invitation to the NAIA National Tournament held in Sioux City, Iowa. It was the Lady Trojans' first trip to nationals since 1998. The club fell victim to Cardinal Stritch in the first round, 69-41. Liz Plass '05 was named All-Conference first team, while Melanie Brumbaugh '05 was voted to the second team and Lydia Harris '06 received third team accolades. Katie Madden '08 was named to the All-Freshman team.
A celebration of faithfulness

The enduring story of Taylor University is the faithfulness of God over more than a century-and-a-half. At each juncture of our history God has proven Himself by supplying the right provisions at the right time.

Solomon exalted the faithfulness of God but asked the question, “A faithful man, who can find?” In providing Taylor with the leadership of David Gyertson, He certainly found such a man.

All of us can see the wisdom of God in David and Nancy’s call to Taylor and the validation of that call in the progress and clarity of vision we enjoy. When the Gyertsons came to the task, it was evident to all that we needed experienced, professional leadership in assessing the challenges of the 21st century, as well as objective analytical help in establishing a baseline from which to take the next step. Dr. Gyertson’s unquestioned commitment to biblical faith and his passion for academic excellence with a Christian service perspective has allowed the University board, administration and faculty to affirm, examine and strategize toward the future while testing and strengthening our academic and theological assumptions.

There is always a sense of sorrow when an innovative and successful leader leaves for other challenges. However, in our current situation, two points remain evident. First, as Christ’s followers we rejoice when we see our leader confidently and courageously obeying the call of God in his life. Who could ask for more, and who would want to selfishly stand in the way? The same God who has led the Gyertsons to a great new challenge has a plan for Taylor’s next chapter. “Our times are in His hands.” He is faithful and has been for all these years.

The second evidence of God’s hand is in the accomplishments and imprints that David and Nancy leave behind. The Kesler Student Activities Center is a reality that has affected student life and health. The Fort Wayne campus now has a first-rate library. The capital campaign goal was led to completion and even surpassed its goal. The Center for Teaching Excellence is one of the most important contributions to improving the quality of the academic program in our history. The Center for Research and Innovation is already making its mark in the larger community and providing an engagement with constituencies who were, until now, unaware of the Taylor program. We now have firmly-established graduate programs in environmental science and business administration with more on the drawing board. These are just the public and easily visible accomplishments. What is not so visible are the extensive and far-reaching implications of the long-range planning, in-depth needs assessments, the isolation of key challenges and the strengthening of administrative support structures.

David, thank you for helping Taylor stage itself for the next great step forward. Nancy, thank you for all of the love and support that you have provided so faithfully during this time. You will be greatly missed; however, we exalt in the prospect of God’s plan for both you and Taylor. You leave us with good memories; we are focused with much greater clarity. Your example of a Christ-centered life has inspired us, and we are much better poised to achieve the next level. Though you are leaving for a new challenge, we are celebrating God’s faithfulness in all things for you and for Taylor.

— Jay Kesler ’58

President Emeritus Jay Kesler enjoys spending time in his workshop and with his beloved wife Janie. Although retired, he serves as preaching pastor at the Upland Community Church.
Visual standards

In 1891 a young Samuel Morris courageously left his home in Africa to come to America when blacks were not granted basic human rights. As a Taylor student, Sammy flourished, absorbing everything he could about the Christian faith and community. Today, Taylor still battles racial issues, although they are very different from those that consumed society at the turn of the nineteenth century. The following represents recent conversations about racial perspectives.

Intimidating. The classroom can be an extremely uncomfortable place because it is within those four walls that the stereotypical middle-class, white student is most apparent. This overwhelming majority often creates anxiety for international students. Alicia Chew '07, Malaysia, said, "Swallow [Robin Hall] feels like home when I visit. But I'm the only international student who lives in Bergwall [Hall]."

Exclusive. This word cuts right to the heart of the University's charge: to be a Christ-centered learning, living and serving community. Josh Canada '07, an African-American, said, "The demographics limit us. Because Taylor costs so much money, many African-Americans immediately rule out the possibility of attending Taylor."

Apathetic. Numerous students are simply unaware of their peers' feelings about racial issues. It is not uncommon for a person's view of race and culture to be shaped only by television. Dionne Osman '06, Sierra Leone, recalls being asked, "You live in Kenya? How did you learn English?" Shocked by the student's misguided perception of Africa, Dionne said, "I didn't even know how to answer."

Valuable. Before anything can change there must be a wider understanding of our community's need for students from other cultures. Sarah Kim '06, South Korea, explained, "The Word of God reveals Himself, and we're able to see His character. But each culture reflects certain characteristics of God a lot more than others. In American culture it's more typical to see God portrayed as a friend or like parent-child relationships. If you go to Africa, God is seen as powerful, almighty and all-knowing."

Rindy Schlatter '05, who grew up in Thailand in a missionary family, agreed, "One of the best ways to experience God is to know people because each individual is unique. If we're all like-minded and have similar views of God then we're missing out on a complete view of who He is. You cannot have as rich of an experience just knowing God as American."

Experience. Taylor offers a variety of programs that expose students to other cultures in an intentional and educational environment. Lighthouse trips during January term allow students to live in another culture for three weeks—long enough to acclimate to the host culture. Spring break trips, summer trips like the Spanish program in Oaxaca, Mexico, and semester study abroad programs are all international opportunities. Many students choose to travel the globe during summers working for mission organizations or on short-term trips with their churches.

Matt Mancinelli '06 testified to the value of personal experience. "I went to an event my freshman year at Taylor where I was one of two white people out of 100. Everyone stared at me, and I got my first taste of what it feels like to be a minority in a place that is also your home."

Hopeful. The sound of this word reverberates with clarity and vision in the midst of an otherwise depressing conversation. The same students who are expressing frustration are also offering positive solutions for racial problems. Canada explained the core issue when he said, "This is not a white problem or a Taylor problem; this is a Christian problem."

North American Christians often live under the illusion that the way they do church, government, education and socialization is right. However, culture is not a standard of right and wrong; it is a set of beliefs that govern behavior and form a way of life. There is only one standard of right and wrong determined by God. Perspective is relative. Truth is real. Culture is not truth.

Sammy Morris is remembered on campus for his contribution to our image of God as a servant-leader, not because his presence increased diversity on campus. However, his African roots enabled him to teach the community in a unique way. As Taylor once did with a young African boy, she must strive once again to look beyond skin color and customs to connect on the foundational level of Christianity.

— Jill Hamilton '07
In the sea of life, we sail through the unique waters in which we find ourselves. Some experiences may be barely survivable in the rushing rapids, while others may allow coasting on peaceful streams. It is the way we navigate through these waters that reflects our character and purpose.
"As water reflects a face, so a man's heart reflects the man."
Proverbs 27:17
How a Taylor grad returned to the land where he fought for his country in World War II—the second time he fought to save souls.
Dried flowers greeted me as I turned into the gravel driveway behind a parked black Camry. A bumper sticker shouted “JESUS” from the back window. A gold and purple plaque proudly proclaiming “Taylor University Alumni” framed the license plate. I knew I was in the right place.

I quickly noticed a flag decal prominently displayed in the front window as I rapped on the wooden door. A friendly stranger with a smile the size of Montana welcomed me. His belt buckle, nearly as big as his grin, accented his navy pinstripe suit and cowboy boots. The lines on his face screamed that he had a story to tell.

A rich life filled with memories emerged from the decor of his humble home in Clifford, Ind. Plaques of appreciation hung on the walls; treasures from other countries were sprinkled throughout the room; an emerald crocheted afghan lay draped across the back of the couch; an African violet was living on the end table by the window.

My attention was quickly drawn back to the gracious host. Reverend Calvin Vass ’53 stood a mere 5’10,” but he filled the room with his presence. His 80-year-old spunk resembled that of one sixty years his junior. The father of five, grandfather of nine and great-grandfather of seven was quick to bestow his wisdom and perspective on life.

His coffee-colored eyes sparkled as he spoke of his wife, Claudina. They shared nearly 60 years of wedded bliss until January 2002 when she lost her battle to cancer. “It takes God and real love to be married that long,” he said. He now shares his life with his Cocker Spaniel, Jasmine. Together, the two visit Claudina at the cemetery almost every day.

Calvin and Claudina were married on March 20, 1943, the day he reported to the Army. Only ten days later, he would leave on a three-year journey that would forever change his life.

After basic training and a three-month stay in California at a replacement depot, Calvin was shipped to Hawaii, where, as he put it, “I should have known something was up.” While there, he went through one month of intensive training when he learned to fire every kind of machine gun and firearm possible. He reminisced, “There were times I thought ‘Why are we doing all this?’ I found out later on because that’s exactly what we had to do in the war.”

He then traveled for 29 days by ship to Okinawa, Japan.

“We took a zig-zag course to throw off submarines. Once there, there were two lines of ships—as far as I could see north and as far as I could see south. We went over the side of the ship at 3:30 a.m. It was dark. We went down on rope ladders. The ship was bobbing up and down, and we were trying to find where to put our feet on the landing craft. We had a full pack on with a rifle that we had to hold over our head to keep it from getting wet. I’m short, so had I stepped off in the coral, that would have been it. Some did. We were expendable.”

His face grimaced as he took a deep breath. “I’m reliving it,” he said. “That’s not good.” He paused for a moment and fought the puddles forming in his eyes. He continued slowly ...
"We landed April 1, 1945, Easter Sunday. We did that to throw off the Japanese because they wouldn’t think we would come in on Sunday—Easter Sunday at that! I wore a steel helmet for an Easter bonnet that year!

I was in the eleventh wave. The first wave hit at 8:30 a.m. We were there by 11:30 a.m. I looked up and saw planes coming in formation. I saw one take a dive, so I knew they were not friendly. We were standing up watching it like we were at a ball game. Ships were shooting at him—over our heads. They came in every day for the first thirty days, sometimes more than once a day.

Every night, I dug down. While we were in that position one night, they came in with a Betty bomber. He dropped a bomb on our area; we heard it come down, but it didn’t go off. Had it gone off, I wouldn’t be talking to you. I thought I was lucky, but I found out, you see, that I wasn’t lucky at all. It was God.”
Back at home, Claudina made a commitment to the Lord. She prayed "Lord, if you bring him home safely from Okinawa, we will do whatever you want us to do." Calvin credits his wife and the Lord's mercy for sparing his life.

"I had a lot of chances to be killed—at least ten or 12. They came in one night bombing, and ours was the last company. Our chaplain was in the one ahead of us, and he was killed that night. When the plane got above our platoon, he pulled up, went out over the ships and they shot him down.

Another time, they were raking our area with 20-millimeter shells. One tore a trench in the dirt about six inches from my hand.

Later, we moved down the beach and landed in the harbor, but the tide had gone down. Someone hadn't figured right, because we shouldn't have been there. There was nothing but muck. The Japanese knew right where we were. We were sitting ducks. We waded through that muck. That was another time God spared my life. We went to our foxholes. They were throwing screaming mimies, which sound just like women screaming. The idea is to get you up. If you move, they can see you. If you don't move, they can't. Bullets were whizzing over our heads. Had we raised up, that would've been it. It was tough to stay there because you think those things are going to land right on you. And they could. One didn't hit us, but there were some in our company that weren't as lucky. God was taking care of me, but I didn't know that at the time."

Calvin returned home in January 1946, after enduring three years of combat.

"I went in as an 18-year-old and came out a 21-year-old. I went in a boy and came out a man. My wife didn't think I was happy to be home because I would pace the floor. I was physically home, but my mind was still back in Okinawa. I was home, but I wasn't really home. That went on for a long time."

That fall, Calvin accepted the Lord as his Savior at a church revival and answered the call to ministry. "I pastored, then God called me to go back to Okinawa. I went on a trip with OMS International to visit Japan, Hong Kong and Okinawa. It brought back a lot of memories. Claudina got to see the very beach where I landed."

In 1955, Calvin was one of three co-founders of Global Harvesters Missionary Organization. The mission continues today, taking pastors, students and laymen to the field. As a result, thousands have come to know the Lord.

But eighty years of adventures haven't been enough for Calvin. He will travel to Paraguay in November on a two-week mission trip. "I've got eight years left on my passport, and I've got to use them up!"

I listened as he excitedly shared his plans for the future. I could have listened to this Godly servant for hours, soaking in his wisdom and perspective on life, but our time was quickly drawing to a close.

As I prepared to leave, I couldn't help but notice a large portrait of Japanese symbols on the wall. Curious, I inquired as to its meaning. With a smile, he replied, "Goodness, Faithfulness, Long Life, Together."

As I backed my car out of the drive, I couldn't help but think that that's just what he, with the Lord's help, has experienced.
On May 10, former president’s wife Jean Bergwall will celebrate her ninetieth birthday. She has weathered some rough waves in her time, but God provided the still waters to restore her soul.
There isn’t much that keeps Jean Bergwall HA ’81 down. She has experienced plenty that could have—a heart attack, triple bypass surgery and losing her husband—but she continues living life to the fullest each day and has for most of her ninety years.

Born in Glascoe, Scotland, Jean and her family relocated to Ansonia, Conn., after World War I. She married Dr. Evan Bergwall ’39 in 1941. “I didn’t date until my husband came to ask if I would play the piano at their church that was two blocks from my house.”

Shortly after their marriage, Evan was assigned to pastor a United Methodist church in Brooklyn, NY. They later moved to Waterbury, Conn., then New York City. “Those were the days when you served two years before taking a new appointment. They did that until you were broken in,” she said. They also served in Muncie and Kendallville, Ind., prior to their tenure at Taylor.

“When the board asked if he’d become president, he came home and we prayed about it,” she said. But Jean wasn’t convinced it was something she could do, “I didn’t think I could be a president’s wife. I just didn’t feel worthy of that.”

But she was more than adequate for the job. “I let it be known to the students that if they were homesick or wanted a glass of milk and a cookie, they were welcome to come to our house. Many of them did,” she said.

Jean’s impact reached far beyond the students; she began a women’s ministry that continues to this day, over fifty years later. I called together some faculty wives to see if they would be amiable to pray, and they were. We prayed for all the names of students our husbands brought home. A lot of those students didn’t even know they were being prayed for,” she said.

Overall, being a president’s wife was a positive experience for Jean. “It wasn’t as hard as I thought it would be,” she said. “In fact, I enjoyed it. Taylor is a wonderful Christian school. She makes an impression on the world. I feel very blessed to have been a part of it.”

The two served at Taylor until 1959, when Evan returned to his pastoral ministry at a church in Fort Wayne, Ind. He also served six years as Elkhart District Superintendent, during which time he found that he was lacking a minister for a small, country church. Since Jean had already earned a local preacher’s license, she reluctantly took over—“only until they found someone else. I told Evan he better find someone within a month!” she said. One month quickly turned into 19, but she didn’t seem to mind. “I loved the people there,” she said. Together, Evan and Jean served the Lord in a variety of ministries over the years until Evan died of a massive heart attack in 1979. “Losing a husband was traumatic. Although I knew he was in heaven, the severance was awful. We had been together for 38 years.”

It was during the sleepless nights that followed that she began a ritual she continues to this day. “If I can’t sleep, I recite the Ten Commandments, then Psalm 1, 23, 100 and John 14. I’m usually asleep by then,” she said.

Jean recognizes the Lord’s hand in bringing her through the difficult times that followed—including a heart attack and triple bypass surgery. “He has promised to take care of the widows in Scripture, and it is so right. He has provided for me and protected me over the years,” she said.

Jean’s sons, Evan Jr. ’64 and David, have also been instrumental in caring for her. “I’m so proud of my family. I’m so thankful for them,” she said. “I don’t know what they have planned for my birthday, but more than anything I just want to have a nice dinner with my whole family.”

With her birthday quickly approaching, Jean is convinced that she doesn’t feel that old. “I can’t believe I’m turning 90! I don’t know how it’s supposed to feel, but I don’t feel it,” she said.

And she certainly doesn’t act it. Jean is president of her Sunday school class at Roswell United Methodist Church; she alternates teaching her Covenant Bible class; she is chaplain of the altar guild and her local United Methodist Women group; she visits the sick and shut-ins. Every day she calls three women who are blind to read devotions to them.

Jean’s prescription for such a long, rich life? “Don’t take yourself too seriously,” she said. “Remember that no matter what comes, the Lord will see you through.”

The Lord has seen her through a great deal in her lifetime, but she still has much to look forward to. “Heaven. I’m looking forward to going home,” she said. “But for now, the Lord still has things for me to do.” And it’s those things that will keep her going (and busy) until the Lord calls her home.
steadfast leadership

How the man behind the president is personally committed to his call as provost.
The coming months are a crucial time for the Taylor University board and administrative team as they prepare for the transition to a new University president. "Dr. Gyertson has the administrative team in place and the short-term objectives identified to ensure that the mission of Taylor University will be sustained and new opportunities will continue to arise," said Taylor Provost Dr. Steve Bedi '65.

Second in command at Taylor, Bedi works directly alongside President Dr. David Gyertson. He is responsible for all programs, planning and assessment at the University. His job is to ensure that Taylor as a whole is on target with her mission. His passion is to ensure the quality of education and the sufficiency of resources for all Taylor students and faculty.

Bedi and other members of the administration are prepared to continue the momentum that is currently driving new programs and initiatives at Taylor. "I am not only praying for it, I am personally committed to achieving both the short-term and long-term goals that David Gyertson has helped us develop during his time at Taylor."

To Bedi, maintaining the quality of education at Taylor means going beyond the requirements and expectations. "I am always looking for a new goal or challenge beyond the mission," he said. Two recent examples of this drive are Taylor's newly-formed Center for Research and Innovation and Center for Teaching Excellence.

"I am always looking for a new goal or challenge beyond the mission."

It was the University's Christ-centered education that brought Bedi to Taylor in 1961 as an undergraduate student. "During my time as a student at Taylor my heart was renewed, my calling was affirmed, and many of my questions were answered," he said.

In 1991, thirty years after arriving as a student, Bedi returned as the associate dean of education and director of the teacher education program. He felt called by God to return to Taylor because of its community atmosphere and commitment to its mission. Since then Bedi has served as the associate vice president for academic affairs and dean of the Upland campus, as well as vice president for administration and planning. In 2003 he moved into his current position as provost. Bedi is dedicated to using his position to enable the University to fulfill its mission in a high-quality manner.

"As Dr. Gyertson prepares to leave his position as Taylor president, he is leaving the University a better place than when he came," said Bedi. "Hudson Taylor once said that God's work done God's way will never lack God's supply." This a source of inspiration for Bedi as the University goes through a crucial time of transition.

"The search for a new University president is a great opportunity to attract the brightest and the best to Taylor," he said. "I believe that it is important to leave a place better than when you came, and that is exactly what Dr. Gyertson has done." — Kerry Porter '06
charting the course

A tribute to Taylor's 29th president as he prepares to answer God's call elsewhere.
David Gyertson’s favorite character from scripture is Caleb. But his story resembles one with whom he shares a name—David and Goliath.

Gyertson’s account is one of overcoming adversity, beating the odds when they were against him. The son of an alcoholic father and an emotionally troubled mother, Gyertson found himself on his own at the age of 13. Christian friends took him in and shared the Gospel message.

This past has helped shape him into the man he is today—a man after God’s own heart, a man God has used to mold and influence Taylor University and the lives of people here.

Gyertson arrived at Taylor in 2000 with a desire to mentor the next generation of Christian leaders. Now it’s just that desire that is taking him back to the classroom.

“We are being called back to what we felt our original call is,” said Gyertson. “The vision to be equipping the emerging world leaders for the Christian faith has been deep in my spirit for thirty years; it has been my sense of mission and calling.”

“We are being called back to what we felt our original call is.”

He will complete his presidency on or sometime before December 31, depending on the results of the ongoing search for his successor. He trades in his title of president for distinguished professor of leadership formation and renewal at the School of Leadership Studies at Regent University, Virginia Beach, Va.; an institution he co-founded in 1977.

Most memorable for Gyertson has been the passion for excellence in both academic and interpersonal relationships, something he has evidenced on both campuses. “Taylor is at its best when it’s in a time of crisis, where people need to be personally supported and assisted. Taylor does crisis-intervention better than I’ve seen most other places.”

Gyertson has often reflected this in his own life, as well, acting as a pastor of sorts to the Taylor community. He frequently sent e-mail messages of praise to faculty and staff, as well as called on members of the community during times of illness or crisis.

“[Gyertson’s] tender pastor’s heart, constancy in prayer and obedience to God’s leading has had lasting impact on my life,” said Harold Hazen, vice president for university advancement. “I have personally benefited greatly from Gyertson’s wonderful gift for mentoring.”

Of his time at Taylor, Gyertson hopes it can be said of him as it was of King David in Acts: “He served God’s purposes while he was here and that there was no question about Nancy’s and my desire to do what was right.”

And, in the end, just as David was successful in slaying the giant, Gyertson too was successful in his endeavors and will continue to be so, wherever God may lead.
continuing the journey

A presidential farewell
Nancy and I are midwest natives and as a result have always enjoyed the changing seasons. The Scriptures are full of analogies and metaphors celebrating God's creation calendar. There are lessons to be learned, opportunities to be embraced and obligations to fulfill as life's journey unfolds. Our God is the Heavenly Father who delights in equipping His children to serve Him at each stage of life so that His purposes can be realized upon the earth.

As Nancy and I start a new season in our calling it is difficult to leave behind the places and experiences that now mean so much to us. There are so many "ebenezers" as we reflect on our years here at Taylor. God has accomplished so much among us in keeping with His exceeding abundant promise in Ephesians 3:20—my anchor verse for our time in this special place.

It will be most difficult to separate from so many of you who have influenced our lives deeply, encouraging and challenging us to new levels of commitment and calling. However, the opportunity to devote the capstone years of my career to equipping the next generation of emerging Christian leaders to change their world is a compelling and persistent vision we must fulfill. From the Taylor University Board of Trustees, our devoted alumni and gifted faculty, to our dedicated staff and outstanding students who have touched us in ways that we could never fully express, we say thank you and thanks to our God for His work through you!

Like any transition process, there are details that still need to be finalized. While the exact date of my departure is dependent upon the selection of my successor, please be assured that we are working with the board to ensure a seamless transition. And, just as we are excited about God's new direction for our lives, we have a great sense of anticipation as the next season of God's plan for Taylor University's life-transforming mission unfolds. By God's grace and your faithfulness we believe that Taylor is in a strong position to continue its history of worldwide impact for the kingdom of Jesus Christ. As you remain uncompromisingly Christ-centered and biblically anchored Taylor will continue to be an important catalyst in God's plans for a world that desperately needs to both hear and experience the redemptive love of Jesus Christ.

May the Lord continue to do exceedingly abundantly above all that you could ask or even imagine in your calling to be a Christ-centered learning, living and serving community.

"Christ-centered learning, living and serving community."

Daniel J. Taylor
Wealthy men, such as Rockefeller and Gates, have long been renowned for their contributions to society. The following brings to light an uncelebrated portion of Taylor’s history.

Dedicated by nature, generous by choice. Taylor donor and parent Joanne Seaman dedicates herself to riding her bike during the summer months.
When one thinks about the people who have made Taylor uniquely Taylor, names like Samuel Morris, Thaddeus Reade, Milo Rediger and Jay Kesler come to mind, all of whom have made a significant impact on the University. There are numerous others, many women, whose humble philanthropy has benefited this institution in ways too numerous to mention, and yet their compensation has been, in some cases, no more than a simple "thank you."

This is a tribute to the generous women who over the years have gone without public recognition or recompense. Although it would be impossible to name each one with her individual charitable contributions, the honorable stories of several women are told here in reverent gratitude to all who have sacrificed for Taylor. Ken Smith, executive director of the William Taylor Foundation, said, "The commitment of these women is exceptional. Their legacies still directly impact the campus today."

One of the earliest significant donations was in 1902 from the widow of Christopher Sickler, one of the early Taylor trustees. She gave out of a desire to "help young ministerial candidates obtain their educational preparation," according to William Ringenberg's Taylor University The First 150 Years. Because of her generosity, Sickler Hall was built. Today, after more than 100 years, the building has been completely restored and serves the University well as a home for the alumni relations office, the William Taylor Foundation and the Compton Art Gallery.

In 1910, Helena Gehman paid for much of the cost of a new music hall, which today is affectionately called Helena Memorial Hall in her honor. The structure has served numerous functions over its lifetime and now gives incoming students some of their first impressions of campus as they meet with the admissions office staff on the first floor. Helena also houses the president's office on the second floor.

Garnet Rice '29, who experienced that era in Taylor history as a student, "treasured her experience at Taylor beyond anything," said Chuck Newman, friend and former director of the William Taylor Foundation. She and her husband Ray '29 set up trusts and made regular gifts to Taylor, but it was Garnet's deep love for Taylor and its students that prompted her to fund the Rice Bell Tower in memory of her husband and to leave her estate to fund the Alumni Department Scholarship Fund. Her gift to the Rupp Communication Arts Center named an area in memory of her parents.

Another thoughtful lady in Taylor's history is Ruth Flood '28, who lived with her uncle, Burt Ayres, dean and interim president of Taylor, while attending the University. She received her master's degree from the University of Michigan and went on to teach at several institutions, including Bob Jones University, yet she remained loyal to Taylor. "Her life was Taylor," said Newman. "She loved Taylor and the students." Her devotion was evidenced through her frequent donations. While living, she set up a scholarship fund for dependents of alumni. At her death, her estate was added to that fund. In addition, she made a significant gift to the Rupp Communication Arts Center and named an area in memory of her sister, Cena Mann, and her mother, Nettie Flood. Ruth, who never married, loved to read and play her organ, which is now located in the Sickler Hall prayer chapel.

Crystal Silverman '35 had a strong sense of business. Married later in life, Crystal may have gained some of her business sense from her husband, Louis, who was a stockbroker. Her love extended to Taylor with regular gifts. When she died, Taylor and the William Taylor Foundation were the largest beneficiaries. In honor of her gift and memory, a room was named for her in the Modelle Metcalf Visual Arts Center.

Philanthropic women are certainly not limited to Taylor graduates. Equally influential were Jessie Cain, Hortense Braden HA '78 and Joanne Seaman. Jessie learned of Taylor through her pastor David Le Shana '53, who as a student was the pastor of the little country church she attended. This began a friendship that lasted a lifetime. "She had a real desire to help kids at Taylor because of Le Shana," said Nelson Rediger, associate executive director of the William Taylor Foundation. "She just couldn't say enough good about Taylor, and she wanted to financially help others come." There is a classroom named in memory of her husband, Walter, in the Smith-Hermanson Music Center.

Hortense Braden encountered Taylor after her car broke down, and a Taylor development officer stopped to help. This began a friendship that resulted in significant gifts over the years and her estate passing to Taylor at her death. The Braden Room in the Hodson Dining Commons, which serves as the president's dining room, is named in her honor and provides a beautiful area for University administrators to host special meals and meetings.

More recently, Joanne Seaman has continued a tradition that her husband Rick Seaman '78, Taylor business professor who died in 1998, began nearly ten years ago. Rick was disappointed to find that Taylor's alumni giving rate was below the national average, so he formulated an idea. He gave each graduate an envelope with a total of $3, a one-dollar bill and a two-dollar bill. He encouraged graduates to give the one-dollar bill back at graduation rehearsal, the two-dollar bill the first year after graduation and to double their gift each year—thus their first two years of donating were provided. Joanne has kept the Seaman tradition alive in her husband's memory. As a result of the Seamans' generosity, the alumni giving rate has increased, and graduates are encouraged to begin a lifetime of giving back to their alma mater.
Other significant charitable donations have come from long-time friends and alumni of Taylor including Nellie Scudder Smith, LaRita Boren HA '94, Roselyn (Baugh) Kerlin '55, Diane Humphrey, Florence West and Lois Weed '51. Other faithful long-time donors include Mrs. Carol (Gramlich) Scott '52, Delores (Steinbach) Horne '62 and Betty Zurcher. “We could continue listing other alumni and friends whose sacrificial giving has deeply impacted the University,” said Ken Smith. “The names here are representative of the hundreds of deeply committed women whose philanthropic efforts help to sustain the mission and vision of Taylor and her students.”

According to the Women's Philanthropy Institute, women philanthropists have been creating institutions, including schools and colleges, and donating generously to improve society since the 19th century. “In my 25 years of raising support for Christian higher education, the largest gifts I've ever received have been by women philanthropists,” said Harold Hazen, vice president for university advancement. “Women literally put their money where their heart is!”

The generous women who have given to Taylor believe in the University and its students, and they want to make a difference. Nelle Alspaugh Hodson '43, long-time friend and donor, is one such example. “I give to Taylor because investing in students’ lives, particularly college students, is my way of making a difference in tomorrow,” she said.

Hodson is not alone in her charitable commitment to investing in meaningful, life-changing endeavors. Bertha Gilson '29, is still very much involved in Taylor through regular financial gifts. She continues to be interested and excited about Taylor’s students, the campus facilities and the spiritual atmosphere of Taylor.

“Our women donors take their giving very seriously,” said Joyce Helyer, associate vice president for university advancement. “They feel the weight of responsibility for the resources with which God has blessed them, and they pray for wisdom to be good stewards.”

Perhaps these charitable donors can best be summed up by a common thread that runs through them—their faith in Jesus Christ and their love for Taylor. All of their dedication, benevolence and involvement in Taylor has enriched the lives of so many and will continue to do so in the years to come. May their legacies live on.

Thank You!
Phil and I used to stare at a large world map that hung next to his desk. Late at night, we would imagine heaven to be the adventure of exploring a restored earth.

On the Indian Ocean, full sail, at the helm of a small seafaring vessel and a storm raging all around, we’d be headed wherever the wind would lead, to delight in creation. At the snap of our fingers or the click of our heels we’d be there, but it would be about the journey we conjectured, not the destination. No fear of death or an end, just the open sea and the blinders removed from our eyes.

God was drawing Phil closer to Himself in his last earthly weeks, closer to the adventure we imagined. I had never seen anyone in the Word as much as Phil was then, so much I thought it strange. But Phil was finding himself in its pages; he was finding his true identity in Christ, an identity free from fears that held him back.

In his last words to a friend before taking off for his run on April 3, Phil confessed he had finally realized what it meant to love the way God loves: a love that is not tied to circumstance or condition. He was excited to come back to Taylor to share this love with those around him.

Tragically, Phil never returned from his run. He was struck by a car and later died in a hospital bed surrounded by family and friends who loved him dearly. I was one of many Taylor students who traveled to High Point, NC, to support the Schrums and grieve the loss. But we encountered something we had not expected—an outpouring of love by Phillip’s family. Phillip’s mother challenged us to ask difficult questions: What holds us back? What keeps us from living lives unfettered by fear, lives free from that which keeps us stationary and renders us blind to move where God moves?

What if we could live every day as if we had no shame, no embarrassing past or current condition? What if none of it mattered? Phil would insist he often fell short, but in the end he learned something for which we all must strive: to live lives of unconditional love free from fear and worry.

If you get the chance, sit down in front of a large world map sometime and stare... If you haven’t lost all that once made you a kid, your imagination should do the rest. Now blink, and realize you’ve been given this day. Own it; take the responsibility given to invest in others and to live authentically. For life is short, and we have not been given a spirit that makes us slaves to fear, but we’ve received a spirit of Sonship and by Him we cry, “Abba,” Father (Romans 8:12-15).

There’s a hole in Taylor’s campus and in the hearts of those who loved him. We miss Phillip Schrum, but we’re also missing his spirit of love that was God-given. He has gone ahead of us, and now we are left with his challenge to share God’s unconditional love with those around us. —Brooks Boorger ‘05

Take it to the Hoop

Special Olympics takes the court

Taylor Disability Outreach (TDO) hosted its first Take it to the Hoop basketball tournament for Special Olympics athletes on Jan. 15, 2005. The event took place at the Kesler Student Activities Center from 8 a.m. until 10 p.m.

Coming from as far as Elkhart, Ind., to the north and Crawfordsville, Ind., to the south, 37 teams with over 400 Indiana Special Olympics athletes participated in the day's activities. More than 100 Taylor students helped with the event as volunteer referees, team hosts, score-keepers and concession workers. The event also included entertainment and music for the athletes to enjoy.

"To see the many students there interacting with these men and women and their families was one of the most outstanding examples of love in action that I think I have seen," said TDO coordinator Richard Baldwin '77.

"A coach who had been involved in Special Olympics for 15 years approached me and said that it was the best Special Olympics tournament he had ever been to," said TDO co-chair Chris Horst '06.

The basketball tournament is one of several events hosted by TDO in conjunction with the Special Olympics of Grant County.

Marrying military men

How two alumnae unexpectedly became friends

Melynie (Cote ’96) Hall lived on First East Olson for three years, yet she never met Kathy (Anderson ’97) Fields who was a three-year resident of Second Center Olson. Both women were PAs their sophomore years and had mutual friends, but they don’t recall ever crossing paths. Little did they know they would become close friends years after their Taylor experiences.

After graduating from Taylor, Melynie moved to Colorado Springs, Colo., to work at Focus on the Family, where she met Brad Hall, an Air Force cadet. She left Focus on the Family to get married in 1997. By the time Melynie left her position, Kathy also moved to Colorado and worked at Focus on the Family in 1999. While there, Kathy met Bill Fields, also an Air Force cadet, and the two were married in 1999.

In 2004, Bill and Brad met while training together for the Air Force in Oklahoma. They quickly discovered that both of their wives were Taylor alumni. The two women finally met when both of their husbands were assigned to McChord Air Force Base in Tacoma, Wash., as C-17 Globemaster pilots.

Kathy and Melynie now live only three miles apart and get together for meals and “play dates” while their husbands are away. Kathy and Bill have two boys, Ivan, 2 1/2, and Grant, 11 months. Melynie and Brad have two girls, Baileigh, 7, and McKenna, 17 months.

“Developing a friendship with Kathy has been a great source of support and encouragement. We understand each other’s situation,” said Melynie. “We laugh all the time at the fact that despite our years at Taylor together and our moves to Colorado, it took marrying military men and moving thousands of miles away to meet each other and become friends.”

After the rain

Thunderstorms rip through the Indiana flatlands each spring. Lightning lights up the night sky while thunder booms and rain falls. If you happen to be unfortunate enough to be caught in the middle of one of these storms, you better have an umbrella handy, though sometimes they offer minimal coverage with Upland's notoriously horizontal rain.

At least once each year, the Upland weather siren sounds, and students are led to dorm basements for infamous tornado drills. It's in these potentially frightening moments that some of the most meaningful conversations are initiated.

It's after the rain that the drenched earth lays refreshed. The aroma of a fresh, spring rain floods our nostrils as we venture onto the campus, tip-toeing around the earthworms on the sidewalks. Sometimes, when we think no one else is looking, we splash in the puddles like when we were young.

And just like when we were kids, we still sing "Somewhere over the rainbow," hoping that the dreams we dare to dream really will come true. Although nothing is for certain, one promise remains—that summer will eventually be upon us—after the rain.
Through deferred educational annuities, the Nairn triplets will each receive $40,000 a year for five years upon their 18th birthday, thanks to a generous gift from a close family friend, Neva Rittgers.

With the help of David and Lorraine (Dillon) Long, the children’s grandparents, and the William Taylor Foundation, a $100,000 educational annuity was established for each of the three grandchildren. These annuities resulted in a substantial tax savings for Neva.

She gave out of her love for Heather (Long) Nairn ‘90, who, along with husband Raymond Nairn ‘89, parent the children.

Neva, who entered the work force immediately after high school, recognizes the value of a solid education. “It is going to take a terrific amount of money for them to go to college. The least I could do is help them get started.” Through this educational investment, the triplets will be able to attend the colleges of their choice, with the hope that they will choose Taylor.

Although the three have just reached their first birthday, college doesn’t seem that far away to Neva. “Eighteen years seems like a long time, but it will be here before they know it.”

If you would like more information on the Deferred Educational Annuity Plan or other annuities, contact Ken Smith, Nelson Rediger, Ian Blair or Tom Essenburg at the William Taylor Foundation at (765) 998-5144, www.taylor.edu/wtf.
Taylor art professors Zack and Gala Bent were recognized as two of the “25 Emerging Artists” in the 2004 issue of SEEN, the journal of Christians in the visual arts. Zack, visiting instructor of art and communication arts, specializes in photography and digital video. His wife Gala, assistant professor of art, focuses on foundations and painting. “Perhaps most significantly, Zack and Gala model the life of the artist of faith—a life of active and productive involvement in many aspects of the arts that is both an extension of and imbued with a spiritual vision,” said Dr. Rachel Smith, Gilkison family chair in art history and chair of the art department.
