About the play . . .

According to the author, this is a play about death, the Resurrection and the Church. It is a true story, based upon his own experience as a pastor in an industrial parish in England.

In the play the cast is asked to assume the role of different characters at a moment's notice. Those who watch this enactment are asked to exercise a considerable flexibility of imagination as the action moves from one scene to another, from one time in history to another.

This production of Cry Dawn in Dark Babylon marks the second of the three projects developed by members of the class in religious drama during this semester. Earlier, members of the class read the role of the chorus in the faculty reading hour of Oedipus Rex. On December 15 the class will produce Charles Williams' Christmas play The House by the Stable for the Sunday evening service.
