Taylor University has a history that began in 1846. Today this Christian college reflects the prayers and faith that have sustained her through more than a century of service, until she now stands as a fully accredited, co-educational, private liberal arts institution with a program that is effectively Christian.
Bishop William Taylor, Pioneer Bishop of the Methodist Church, a namesake of Taylor University, left these behind which have become tradition upon campus. When viewed by themselves as part of a life that reached around the world, they seem rather insignificant; but as part of Taylor’s tradition, they stand as a symbol of this great man who so perfectly embodied the spirit and genius of the Taylor program.

The cane, now more properly referred to as the mace, was sent to the college some years after Bishop Taylor was on campus. It was cut by him in South America and used throughout his extensive missionary work in that country.

Today the mace is carried at the head of all academic processions on the campus.
Bishop Taylor was on campus to lay this cornerstone in 1893. Today H. Maria Wright Hall houses the administrative offices, the Walker Museum, classrooms, the chemistry laboratories, and the art and speech departments.

The new men's dormitory aptly symbolizes a challenge toward greater achievements of future Christian Higher Education.
Daily devotions are a vital part of the student's day at Taylor.

Missionary Conference and Youth Conference round out the spiritual life on Taylor's Campus.
Chapel worship provides a refreshing spiritual experience in the midst of a busy morning's schedule.

The spiritual heritage received from this pioneer Bishop is best exemplified in his words, "this work is of God." This statement set a pattern for over a century of Christian Higher Education upon Taylor's Campus. Her graduates have trained for fields of service both at home and abroad. Taylor University continues to answer the heritage of Bishop Taylor with this motto, "Since 1846 . . . Effectively Christian."
The Ayres-Alumni Memorial Library provides adequate space and facilities for 45,000 volumes, a record library, audio-visual aids, class rooms, and reading rooms.
The cheering of fans at a football game, the gay laughter from the dormitory bull-session, the swelling of music from a campus choral group, the hushed talk of a couple on an evening stroll and the serenity of a prayer time in the chapel dramatically present a well balanced life at Taylor. These sounds, with many others to supplement them, exemplify the various moods of a college campus.
Small classes, such as this botany class, make education more individualized.
An unusual educational experience is in store for the students who become members of the Taylor Campus Community. They will work, study, play and worship with students from more than 30 states, over 30 denominations, and several countries.

By consent they will agree to refrain from smoking, dancing and the use of alcoholic beverages while they are members of the Taylor family. This unique fellowship and environment offer every opportunity to grow mentally and spiritually.

Science students are shown using a diffusion cloud chamber to observe radiations emitted by uranium.

Students in the modern language department have opportunity to use this fine language laboratory.
The faculty at Taylor serve far beyond the demands of the average college professor. Their work has only begun when they take their places in the classroom. Beyond the hours of instruction and grading lie the many opportunities to counsel with the young men and women who come under their influence. Many times the problems are academic, but very frequently they involve spiritual factors that call for prayer as well as guidance. This intimate relationship between faculty and students is a vital part of the educational experience at Taylor.
In the classroom, an adventure in teaching and learning.

Dedicated to a calling

In the office, friendly guidance.
Taylor offers 16 major fields of study in six Divisions, providing a broad selection of studies, and preparation for many vocations. Student participation and practical experience are a basic part of the academic program.

Student teaching, participation in musical groups, dramatic productions and many other activities, afford practical experience, develop skills, and build self-confidence.

A leading automotive industrialist, one of a regular series of guest lecturers, conducts a question and answer session with business students.
Taylor University grants either the Bachelor of Arts or the Bachelor of Science in Education degrees to graduating seniors. Pre-professional courses are available in law, engineering, nursing, medicine, medical technology, business and theology. Affiliation programs are featured in law, engineering, business and nursing. A five year missionary course is also offered.

Science students monitor radiation in the fume hood in Taylor's new radioisotope laboratory. Students receive training in the use of radioisotopes under the direction of qualified scientist-teachers. Research in radiation biology is also conducted under the sponsorship of the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission.

Taylor participates in all major intercollegiate sports in the Hoosier College Conference. Athletics provide valuable experience for aspiring coaches and Physical Education teachers.
Taylor's beautiful 40 acre landscaped campus as seen from the air.
Taylor's new ultra-modern Food Service Center represents the first completed phase of a five million dollar long-range development program. The dome-shaped dining room provides spacious and unique dining accommodations for 600 students. Excellent food service makes this a center of campus interest. The cafeteria line is used for breakfast and lunch, and family style is observed at dinner.

The new Sammuel Morris Men's Residence Hall, which houses 176 students in 88 double rooms, features the latest in comfortable, modern living facilities.

The striking new Food Center and Men's Residence Hall are shown in sharp contrast to the Administration Building which was erected in 1894.
Admission is determined by evidence relating to the whole personality of the applicant. This evidence relates to personal habits, character and ideals, environmental and cultural background, health, extra-class interests, purpose in life, and units of high school work. Proper achievement in the foregoing, graduation from high school in the upper one-half of the graduation class, and proper attitude toward the aims and objectives of the institution are chief requirements for admission.

Scholarships

Scholarships at Taylor are awarded on the basis of ability, attitude and evidence of financial need. For information regarding scholarships available to entering freshmen, write the Director of Admissions.
