Had Billy Graham Gone to Seminary

Dr. Edward John Carnell, president of Fuller Theological Seminary, points out in the current issue of Christianity Today that Billy Graham did not attend seminary. Therefore "he has no criteria by which to measure the shades of better and worse in the complex systems which vie for the modern mind. And his weakness pretty well sums up the weakness of orthodoxy itself." Dr. Carnell finds lack of profundity in contemporary orthodoxy but he pays high compliments to the forcefulness and effectiveness of Billy Graham as an evangelist. He says that in spite of its anachronisms, orthodoxy is still a stronghold of Biblical Christianity.

But suppose Billy Graham had gone to seminary to become learned in Niebuhr's realism and all of the other theological tides that come and go. Would he have become so learned that he could not communicate with the common man? Would his burden for the lost have withered by the over-emphasis on the intellectual? Would pride of learning have vitiated his humility?

Billy Graham is a man whom God has raised up for this hour. No other person has ever preached to so many persons and no other evangelist has ever had a higher repute for sincerity and integrity than he. Even his enemies praise these virtues.

But God uses means to shape his instruments and Billy Graham was well on his way to become a "chosen vessel" even before going to Wheaton College for more education. As Stanley High points out in his current book on Billy Graham, several factors were dominant in moulding his life: a rugged Christian home, an old-fashioned conversion, his call to preach, and his attendance at Florida Bible Institute. At this institution he received his first experience in preaching. There the Bible became the foundation for his faith, his life, and his service. To that firm rootage in the Holy Scriptures, Billy Graham owes his note of authority, "The Bible says!"

Stanley High writes, "Thus, when in 1940 Billy graduated from the Florida Bible Institute, his religious faith was past the experimental stage; his commitment to which he believed to be God's will was unconditional; and the Bible, from having been a book of reference, had become for him God's word."

Faculty Members
Attend Conferences

Several members of the faculty recently attended professional conferences.

In addition to other engagements, Dr. S. A. Witmer, president, conducted a workshop for the Education Commission of the National Holiness Association in Minneapolis April 30-May 2. He also gave one of the convention's devotional addresses. He later attended meetings of the executive committee of the Accrediting Association of Bible Institutes and Bible Colleges.

Harvey Mitchell, registrar, attended the national convention of the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admission Officers in Denver April 23-26. During that time, registrars for Bible colleges and other Christian schools named him chairman of their group for the coming year.

Claude Stipe, chairman of the department of missions and anthropology, attended the annual meeting of the Central States Anthropological Society in Madison, Wisconsin, May 2-4.

Seeing the Invisible

W. O. Klopfenstein
Assistant Professor of Bible

Every great achievement in history has been accomplished by some person who had faith in things that were invisible to the multitudes. Virtually everything of permanent worth in life has been achieved in spite of the noisy protests of the crowd who insisted that it couldn’t be done. The real heroes of history are the courageous men and women who have refused to listen to the negative voices of their time, and who, sustained by faith in some invisible goal, have persevered in their lonely way, misunderstood, and often disowned by their contemporaries.

Down in old Egypt a million and a half slaves were groaning under the heel of despotism and were crying to high heaven for deliverance. The man Moses was called of God to the thankless task of leading that motley host out of bondage. I do not wonder that he demurred. Moses knew human nature well enough to realize that the chief reward of leadership is often the base ingratitude of the led, or even worse. It required a magnificent venture of faith on his part to recognize a potential nation in that wretched conglomeration of slaves. But Moses possessed an unflawing trust in the eternal God. He undertook that task by faith in the God who promised to sustain him. In forty years he was enabled to weld those slaves into a nation, a nation which persists to this very day, despite age-long persecution. And his ten point code of laws is still the foundation of orderly society today! Moses refused to be swayed by any combination of circumstances. He endured, as we are told in scripture, "as seeing Him who is invisible."

And we must not forget the great missionaries of the Christian church. St. Paul, Carey, Judson, Paton, Livingston, and a host of others—all of them possessed faith to discover in the raw materials of heathenism the priceless gems which must take their place in the crown of the King of kings.

The world outlook at this moment is anything but encouraging. But therein lies a supreme challenge to our faith. Dark as it is, the situation is not hopeless to the man of faith. How would Moses or Paul meet the challenge of the present world crisis? By faith! How would Washington or Lincoln react in the presence of the world’s bleeding heart? By faith! The God who sustained the heroic souls of other ages is still with us. Infinite resources are available for our present need if we will only appropriate them by faith. Let us, at all costs, maintain our faith in the sublime invisibles! Great achievers are always great believers in the invisible realities which undergird all of life.
